The picture was directed by Paul Powell from a script by Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy. The main action centers about Jimmy Conroy, who at the start of his elopement gets separated from his fair companion because of his endeavor to obtain a minister at a way station. He misses the train and then he and the minister are shown proceeding after it in haste in all sorts of conveyances. They go by hand-car, mule-back—even on the bumpers. The minister, who has been rudely pulled from his bath tub by the anxious Jimmy, cuts an uproariously funny figure. In the end Jimmy defeats the planned interferences of the girl's father and the parental choice for her husband by getting married over the wire. Jimmy perches on the telephone pole, the minister sits in jail and the girl is in her room.

The End of a Violent Journey

There are a good many original bits in the production that create an ultimate effect of satisfaction. The subtitles are excellently humorous when the writer has aimed for this end. We suppose they were written by Miss Loos; at any rate they read like hers. After all we don't feel the slightest hesitation in recommending "The Matrimaniac" for with its few shortcomings it has Fairbanks on the other side of the scales who most assuredly outweighs them.

Constance Talmadge as the girl, Fred Warren as the minister and Wilbur Higby, Clyde Hopkins and Winifred Westover comprise the supporting cast.

"A Lass of the Lumberlands," "A Runaway Car" (Two Reels), and "A Spiked Switch" (Two Reels)

(Signal-Mutual—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

HELEN HOLMES as "A Lass of the Lumberlands" is beautifully breezy in these latest episodes of that characteriscally Western photoplay. Apparently without a tremor, she leaps from a telegraph pole to the top of a freight car and the next instant she is seen hurling through space at the helm or the steering gear of a touring car which barely touches even the high spots.

It is a picture full of thrills and emotions—a picture that grips one's attention and keeps one lashed to the mast, as it were, until Helen is depicted in the midst of the smoldering ruins of a box car, and all this comes about through the intrigue of one Dollar Holmes to circumvent the endeavors of the independent lumbermen to market their wares.

Both pictures abound in vim and virility and if there is anything lacking in spontaniety of action or in versatility of conditions that same certainly escaped the attention of the reviewer.

"The Road to Love"

(Morosco-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

AGAIN the Morosco splendor of settings is in evidence, and Lenore Ulrich as Hafsa, the daughter of Sidi Malik, is very attractive. Algeria, and pure blood Arabian horses, rich raiment, and Bedouin customs so different from ours, make this a very unusual picture. The story, which concerns the rescue of Hafsa from the unbearable Arab life which had caused her mother to run away, and which tolerated slavery and selling womanly beauty for a price, is a strong one, and well worked out. Gordon Roberts, a young American (Colin Chase) is the hero of the story, who infatuated by Hafsa's beauty disguises himself as a native peddler and meets her clandestinely.

Gordon's identity is discovered and he is turned over to an Arab chief, for sale as a slave. Likewise Hafsa joins the same caravan, bribing the chief. The young American has previously saved the life of Karan, another Bedouin chief, who procures his rescue from the caravan. Meantime Hafsa is sold to an old sheik, after Gordon has recognized in her the wonderful dancer at a big fete.

Here fortune intervenes once more to favor the lovers after all seems hopeless. Malik, the father, arrives, and at the entreaty of the girl's mother, who also is by happy chance reunited with Malik after these many years, the two young people are made happy.

The objection to all stories for an American audience where the characters are foreign, even though the local color is of a splendor and magnificence that commands special praise, will hold good in some sections of the country in reducing the popularity of this picture, which but for this fact has dramatic tensity in a large measure. The personal charm of Lenore Ulrich will overcome this to a great extent, but the good American story with native American heroes is the kind that meets the greatest favor with the picture audience which is entirely made up of persons whose dramatic requirement is thrills, suspense, heart interest, and not beauty of scene. We speak of the country at large. Where fine staging and elaborate settings count heavily, this picture will be a winner. As a highly artistic and fine dramatic performance with a brightly shining star, we personally commend it.

"Three of Many"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

C. GARDNER SULLIVAN has based a number of pictures on the European war but we doubt whether he has used it to such good purpose before as he has in "Three of Many." With the battlefields as his background he takes three people, two men and a woman, and proceeds to work out a drama of real force and intensity. He has sketched his characters delicately and so well that when they rub together you are deeply stirred.

Paul, an Italian; Emil, an Austrian, and Nina, also of Italian parentage, live in a New York boarding house. The three are the greatest of friends. War comes and all go to Europe, the two men to serve their respective nations, the woman to act as nurse. The rest of the action takes place in an Italian village on the border line. Paul, Nina's countryman and the more favored of the two, enters the town at head of a troop. They meet and Nina notices that war has already scarred Paul by brutalizing him.

Later the Austrians capture the village and then Nina meets Emil. He has changed even more. Emil realizes the woman is completely in his power, but after a strong scene she softens him by recalling amusing incidents of their past lives in New York. And then the village goes back to the Italians and Emil is in Paul's power but he too is influenced by thoughts of the other life, and for friendship's sake permits his captive to escape.

"Three of Many" is not a spectacle, although there are some striking panoramas of cavalry on the march and some realistic scenes that take place in the village streets.

There are just enough of these in fact to balance the picture. Throughout it is a study of character; its story is based on an exceptional theme which the author has brought in intelligently. The direction accorded by Reginald Barker is of the usual high degree of this man's work, while the settings furnished by the art department are excellent.

The Meeting in Europe—and the Change

"What the World Should Know"

(Sunshine Film Company—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WE haven't the slightest doubt that Emil Harder, general director of the Sunshine Film Producing company, was actuated by the best of motives when he set out to produce "What the World Should Know." His was a sincere effort when he aimed to deliver a message against birth control via the screen. But sincerity does not make a picture. And so in these five reels, fostered by sincerity and nothing else there is nothing to commend. Nothing. There is no acting, there is no directing, no decent camera work. The properties are ludicrous. The subtitles are bad.

Mr. Harder introduces four families. The father of one believes in raising a lot of children. The father of another has one and that is enough—he employs a quack and comes out of the proceedings minus a wife. The father of another raises his boy to be a selfish brute who finally murders him while drunk. The father of another is a perpetual drunkard himself but is reformed by the tactics employed by his son.

If Mr. Harder set out to preach against birth control it is hard to understand why he dragged in the two last families. The first two would have been sufficient to afford the comparison. And it is hard to understand why all the boys in the large family went to war in the end and were killed and why a musical-comedy figure of Uncle Sam appeared to condone the grief-stricken father. For that matter, though it is hard to understand anything about "What the World Should Know," including the cause of its production. Mr. Harder might best put it on the shelf and forget about it, or bury it, or burn it and then we'll forgive and forget.

Leden "Pictures of Arctic Life"

(Special Pictures With Lecture—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

CHRISTOPHER Leden has brought back with him from the Arctic regions some unusually interesting pictures of Eskimo life and customs, and of the ice-bound country a thousand miles north of Hudson Bay. It is interesting to know that Mr. Leden, who has made five expeditions north in a period of a little over three years, under the patronage of the King of Norway, secured these pictures under the greatest difficulties imaginable, losing his developing tanks and having to improvise for this purpose, drying his film on slabs and such material as he could find there. He also secured phonographic records of the weird songs of the natives. Drying films in Eskimo snow houses is not as easy as may be imagined, as these houses are always colder inside than freezing, getting as cold inside the house as twenty below zero.

The pictures shown included native dances and strange costumes, hunting of all kinds of Arctic game from bear to walrus, building snow houses with ice cakes for windows, navigating among icebergs bigger than skyscrapers, and similar evidence that the pictures were as difficult to get as claimed. One of the remarkable "stunts" shown in the pictures is the turning over and over of a native Eskimo in his "kyak" or native canoe. He cannot swim, and but for the fact that he practices this feat from childhood, so that he can turn over and over as if he and the boat were one piece, he would certainly drown.

Eskimo women rowing large skiffs, like galley slaves, with pappooses on the back of each oarswoman, dogs driven abreast, rather than in single file as commonly seen, and other very unusual subjects make up two reels of extraordinary interest, which will be shown in many cities of the country in the near future, with slides and a lecture by Mr. Leden.

The photography of these pictures was excellent, comparing favorably with pictures taken under ordinary conditions.

"I'm Your Husband"

(Nestor-Universal—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

LESLIE T. PEACOCKE, who is now writing and directing comedies at Universal City, has showed a lot in his first half a dozen pictures, mainly that he is unusually qualified for his position. He seems to have a store of original ideas and a fine knowledge of comedy values. "I'm Your Husband," for instance, has a rapid-fire plot, somewhat spicey to be sure, but so humorous and so well handled that the Pennsylvania board should let it pass.

With the old Lyons-Moran combination holding down one end of the Nestors and Peacocke and his originality on the other, the sterling old brand of Universal's is assured renewed popularity.

Curing a flirtatious husband is the idea back of this reel. Dick keeps getting notes from chorus ladies and attempts to deceive his wife by saying that he has a double of the same name who is a great rounder. Clara, the wife, penetrates this thin excuse and resolves to teach him a lesson. She first arouses his ire by asking him where the flowers and candy were he promised her. He denies the promise and she says it must have been his double. Out he goes with a gun looking for him.

When he returns his wife has locked the house. At his cries she looks out the window and says her husband is already in—in bed. Dick paws the earth with rage. The shadow of another figure appears on the shade. You know it's a maid but Dick thinks it's a man. Dick is about as mild as a tempest and the upshot of it all is that he's cured.

Al McKinnon, Alida Hayman, Peggy Coudray and Mina Cunard are the leads and do capable work.

"The Romantic Journey"

(Astra-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Romantic Journey" was molded specially for the exhibitor who wants to feed his audience on a diet of thrills, romance and mystery; it was made for every exhibitor. The Pathe company has managed to provide a picture capable of filling the void left by the absence of the ancient, sensational production which with all its faults sent tingles up and down the spine, and has turned out a picture that retains all the merits of its slung-together predecessor and none of its faults. In place of these latter it supplies good acting, a realistic production and the direction of an artist.

The hero of "The Romantic Journey," a character carried by the popular William Courtney, discovers that a Hindu antique dealer is keeping captive a pretty young woman; the reason for which he knows not and he doesn't care; but he desires to effect the fair maiden's rescue. So he climbs up a balcony, fells one of the Hindu's subordinates in a fight, shuffles along window ledges, encounters a black cat by the side of a coffin, enters a tomb and opens the coffin and finds the girl isn't there! The girl wasn't dead at all and the hero has her for his own finally after the whole mystery has been cleared satisfactorily.

The handling of the scenario by Director George Fitzmaurice is masterly from beginning to end. The touches of the gently grewsome, the admirable contrasts between the drama and the comedy and the realistic manner in which he has pictured his Hindu characters all lay stress on his mastery of his art. The polish that "The Romantic Journey" possesses is due him. In the matter of special sets and appropriate locations he has reached the top-notch of realism. And what is most important of all, he has managed to keep the suspense sustained at all times. The tension never drops; not even when the story flashes back from one phase to another. In short, the direction of the picture is perfect.

Courtney makes his role a true heroic one. Alice Dovey is delightful as the heroine. Macey Harlan has the heavy role and handles it effectively, while Norman Thorp has another important part.

"The Shielding Shadow"

(Pathe—Twelfth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Stolen Shadow" as this episode of the Pathe Serial is called contains so many genuine thrills and so much exciting action that it must perforce be treated as a feature. In this respect it differs little from the many episodes that have gone before. The action in the average episode of "The Shielding Shadow" could easily supply sufficient material for five instead of two reels. But the thrillers in this number bring on startling developments in the story as well.

Ravengar, it seems, has at last brought Sebastian to a halt. He has him cornered in a room and is forcing him to sign a confession of the forgery that sent Jerry Carson to prison when the villain, left unguarded for a moment, attacks and worsts Ravengar. As the police break through the door Sebastian exits through the window, travels along a wire hand over hand until he reaches a telephone pole and then slides to the ground.

"The Stolen Shadow," Episode 12 of "The Shielding Shadow"

He procures a motor cycle and speeds away, the police in pursuit. Another circus stunt is staged when Sebastian shoots off the end of a pier on the motorcycle and lands in the water, at last making complete his escape in a motor boat. He reappears again when Ravengar is explaining the secret of the Shielding Shadow and the three black pellets to Leontine. In a moment when their attention is otherwise occupied he reaches in through the window and steals the pellets and the precious black cloth.

Crossing the street he is felled by an automobile and loses the pellets. He is taken to a hospital and there Ravengar and Leontine find him. Realizing he will be in their power again, he makes use of the black cloth and disappears before their eyes. An exciting fight is then waged between Ravengar and Sebastian in which the latter is finally triumphant. He again disappears as the attendants are about to seize him. As they go to pick up the limp body of Ravengar, he, too, suddenly disappears.

"Under Oath"

(American—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

"UNDER Oath" is another episode of the sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky" and is an especially well conceived plot in which Quitta (Wiliam Tedmarsh), the gypsy king, and De Vaux (Ward McAllister) show to supreme advantage.

The "Under Oath" feature laid great stress upon the gypsy king, because having foiled De Vaux in his effort to eliminate the last of the Stanley race he impresses a friend of the Stanley family the absolute necessity of silence regarding the existence of the Stanley child.

Quitta relates the origin of the "Diamond From the Sky," which dates from the year 1632, when Sir Arthur Stanley is captured by Indians, and just as he is being prepared as a juicy morsel a meteorite drops from the sky and this is taken by the Indians as an evil omen from the Almighty, and Sir Arthur is permitted to go his way. He halts long enough, however, to examine the meteorite and there he finds the diamond, which his nearest of kin are anxious to procure possession of. Hence the resultant intrigue and roguery, in which Blair Stanley (William Russell), a brother of the present owner of the jewel, and De Vaux (Ward McAllister) are the prime movers.

It is a most interesting picture, well connected and leaves not a moment for reflection and much less for guesswork, and will surely prove a great drawing card.

"Broken Chains"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

JOSEPH R. GRISMER and Clay M. Greene are given credit for the story of this picture. It was put into scenario form by Mrs. E. M. Ingleton, and directed by Robert Thornby, and much credit is due them. We have not in many weeks seen a play that impressed us as more worth while from the standpoint of making good with every kind of an audience. Pictures have been made that called for more elaborate staging, perhaps greater single thrills, and have been more widely heralded, but we would not ask for a better picture from a standpoint of dramatic values and sustained interest.

The opening scenes show the hero making a last stand in a fort during the Spanish-American war. He fights to the last ditch, and when wounded receives the special approbation of the officer capturing him. Many years later he meets the daughter of the same general who saw tested his great bravery, and of course it is love at first sight. But love as usual does not run smooth. There are villains and super-villains, white villains and black villains. And the story is right up to top pitch before the second reel is ended. You wonder how the author is going to maintain the unusual tenseness that is so early reached. Picture audiences will indeed find this a great exception among pictures. But the play has just started when it seems about to reach a climax. The hero is thrown into a prison, and escapes and is followed by bloodhounds. He goes to the very room of his lady love and is there protected for the time being, but is again about to be captured when the governor intervenes in a completely novel way, not by pardon but by leasing the convict to his heroine! And even then the author invents more means to reach a still higher climax. The white villain attempts "near-blackmail," while the black villain who committed the murder because of which the hero has all his troubles, is saved to the real climax when he is tortured by a third degree of remorse and superstition easily imagined in a negro.

We won't say some of the situations in this play have not been often used before. The fact that they have been used and found successful, assures us that the play will make a real hit. Carlyle Blackwell and Ethel Clayton carry the honors of hero and heroine. with Herbert Barrington, Henry West and Louis Grisel in other important roles.

"A Coney Island Princess"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

PICTURE patrons will find a surprise in store for them when they see this Famous Players production with Irene Fenwick. To say that it will be a pleasing surprise is our view of the matter. For we have an entirely different Miss Fenwick. The name given this play is misleading if you expect to find anything comic in the "Coney Island Princess." It is a serious drama, with a few comedy touches, but in the main decidedly a human weakness portrayal, and with an unhappy ending. That is its only fault. Of Miss Fenwick's characterization of a "Turkish Dancer," whose naivete wins the admiration of a society renegade (Owen Moore) who finds himself suddenly offered a chance to really earn ten dollars a week as the result of a spree landing him at Gay Coney, it can be assured audiences will like it. In fact, Miss Fenwick, with Famous Players support and direction, is very fascinating and seems to have acquired a naturalness and straight to the heart style of acting which her previous productions lacked, at least in spots. Frankly we think Miss Fenwick's engagement by the Famous Players will prove a big thing for both the star and the producing company.

We do not wish to o. k. this picture as above average Famous Players quality. The plot is on the whole weak, the personality of the co-stars carrying the action and little else added to it. The story is of a rich fellow getting drunk and, because of this, being turned down by his fiancee of his own social station, and immediately forgetting his pique by transferring his attentions to a girl of the poorer class, "poor but honest" (dancer in a Coney Island show). And at variance with the way the story is usually told, he lets the poor girl go back to her old daddy and her simple life as soon as the rich girl changes her mind and forgives him, which hardly creates strong sympathy for the hero in the audience. But the acting and presentation of what little plot there is, is well done, and the Coney Island atmosphere is unique and helps very much to make the picture attractive. For the girl, Miss Fenwick, there is a genuine sympathy role, and the play will add largely to Miss Fenwick's screen laurels.

Loew Gets "Masque of Life"

MARCUS LOEW has made his entry into the film business by purchasing the state rights of "The Masque of Life" which recently was shown at the Park theatre at one dollar prices. It features Rita Jolivet and Pete Montabello, the monkey actor.

Loew bought it primarily to be shown in his Greater New York theatres and the other houses controlled by him, and will also dispose of rights of exhibition over the entire state of New York. Details of the management of the picture will be handled by Lewis T. Rogers.

The purchase of this picture by Mr. Loew was a surprise to the film world, because although he is a pioneer exhibitor, he has never bought or purchased a picture, or secured the state rights to one, preferring to rent his films.

"The Black Butterfly"

(Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

THERE is nothing new in the rambling story of "The Black Butterfly," although it is brought as near to date as the battle of the Marne, and has a blood transfusion demonstration which is mildly instructive. There is not a single horror in the picture and thrills are conspicuous by their absence. But instead of these old intimates there is some very good acting. Several scenes could be lifted out without detriment to the plot, but it would deprive Mme. Petrova of an opportunity to do some good work. The role calls for the kind of woman who "can think and ne'er disclose her mind," and the versatile actress portrays a characteristic that few women can claim, but which all recognize and admire—self-possession.

In a trying scene with an admirer whom she has denounced, among men in general, as a cad and a trickster, she displays a quiet sense of humor. This very good scene takes place in the Black Butterfly's dressing room, where she has invited the wife of an admirer to prove to her that she is not interested in that lady's husband. Hidden behind the mirror, Lady Constance Braislen sees Lord Braislen make love to the Black Butterfly and offer her a string of pearls. The singer indignantly refuses the gift and roundly denounces the giver. Lady Constance, lacking all self-control, pops out from her concealment and rails at her rival, who listens tranquilly to her tirade, then smiles and chuckles with a "what do you think of that" expression.

The heroine has a consistent method of sending her suitors about their business; always some cutting line the first word of which goes home; and the rejected one stalks offendedly away. One unfortunate commits suicide, but it is so beautifully arranged that all the shudder is taken out.

On the whole the picture is good and should prove very profitable, because it cannot fail to please, and will certainly offend no one. The photography is everything to be desired. Mme. Petrova gives a finished performance and the rest of the company do well in their small parts.

The plot is an old one—of the tourist and peasant type. It covers a period of sufficient length for a daughter to grow up and become her mother's rival. In the heyday of her success the Black Butterfly receives a letter which calls up memories. Gaston Duval meets, loves and marries Sonia Smirnova, a Russian peasant. In Paris she is told by a jealous woman that she is not really married to Duval. She leaves him and takes refuge in a convent, where a child is born. Later she becomes the Black Butterfly. Sonia meets Allan Hall. He is engaged to Marie, Sonia's daughter, but he falls in love with the singer. Sonia learns that her own and her daughter's lover are the same person. She sends Allan away. He is angry with the fickle singer and returns to Marie. Sonia becomes a red cross nurse and meets her husband, Gaston Duval. Explanations follow and all ends happily.

"The Secret Kingdom"

(Vitagraph—Chapter One, Three Reels; Chapter Two, Three Reels; Chapters Four to Eight, Inclusive, Two Reels Each)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

A MONEY-GETTER for every kind of theatre has been devised by Vitagraph. Its title is "The Secret Kingdom." We commence our review with this statement because that is what every exhibitor really wants to know first. Charles Richman evidently is a solid master of men kind of hero who is right there every time a thrill is due, and whose real dramatic ability adds very greatly to the feeling of absolute realism that compels attention to every one of the chapters thus far seen. Arline Pretty as Princess Julia, Dorothy Kelly as Madame Savatz, the arch villainess, William Dunn as Phillip's boon companion and protector, and De Jalma West as Count Ramon, Savatz's confederate, are the principal characters, and each plays his role in a way that shows unusually fine direction. Theodore Marston directed all the chapters so far shown, except the eighth.

Serials with elaborate settings, but without the "punch," and serials with a shooting or hazard in every few hundred feet, but so overmelodramatic they would not be tolerated in some theatres, have come and gone, but we believe Vitagraph has mixed all the requisite elements of a serial in such nicely proportioned quantities that "The Secret Kingdom" will have a universal appeal to all classes of audience, and do much to bring back into favor this much abused form of picture.

To begin with, our hero and heroine are introduced as a prince and princess, and are shown in childhood days, when on the assassination of the prince's father through the murderous ambition of the princess's father, the boy prince is taken to America by Captain Barreto (Ned Finley) through the aid of a loyal fisherman and his son Juan. Nothing could be more certain to please all audiences than the royal hunt, with the deer chasing almost in front of the camera. The assassination, the chase and near-capture, and the flight to America, give plenty of life to the opening chapter, which is in three swiftly-acted reels.

Presto! The scene changes to America, and twenty years have passed. We are on an Arizona ranch, and the glamour of royalty is all gone, but we still know our hero and heroine have royal blood and are going to lead charmed lives. A double shooting, and the first sly work of the arch villainess, who attempts to steal the "sealed packet," proving Phillip's birthright, furnish a big climax to chapter two. Chapter three finds Phillip and Julia in the power of a notorious crook, in a den guarded by vicious looking burly negroes, from whom seemingly impossible escape is made when the princess gets the drop on them with a tiny revolver abstracted from her shoe top. This is absolutely unexpected, and is rapidly followed by using the top of an elevator to make a daring dash over rooftops. The noise of the scuffle starts a police investigation, and a police raid and fire add to the accumulating thrills.

With the fourth chapter a new crook, named Oxenham (Arthur Metcalf), helps complicate matters by joining forces with Savatz, and a band of thugs are sent to the Fifth Avenue home of the Manwarings to waylay Phillip, and a fight ensues, while at the same time Oxenham steals from Phillip's room the sealed packet which was left him by his father to deliver to Lieutenant Barreto in Paris. Julia is given a message from her father to treat Phillip as an imposter, and some strong romantic touches are added to a rapid-fire story.

Chapter five reveals another clever plot within a plot, ending with the imprisonment of Julia in an insane asylum as a lunatic, who imagines she is a princess. Phillip rescues her and flees with her on a ferryboat, from which Count Ramon, now arrived to aid the plot, throws him into the river, and charters a yacht. Chapter six closes with Phillip in the den of some harbor thieves, who steal his wallet and papers, but he comes out of a drugged stupor just in time to dispose of these thugs, only to fall into the hands of a Shanghaing band who impress him into service on the very yacht where Julia is imprisoned.

"The Ghost Ship," chapter seven, finds Phillip and Juan in the fireroom of Ramon's chartered yacht. He has been reported dead, and Ramon seeing him peering through the porthole at him is driven almost to insanity. Juan, Phillip and Julia escape in a lifeboat, and the ravings of Ramon cause him and Savatz to be set afloat. Phillip's boat is picked up, and Ramon's boat is also picked up by the same rescue ship, but Ramon tries to murder Phillip and is again set adrift.

This leads up to the eighth chapter, "Rum Cay," which is a marvelous piece of filming, showing the lovers and Juan attacked by strange black pirates. The chapter ends with an unexpected and almost miraculous escape, when the thought of worse than death has caused Julia to exact the promise from Phillip that he would kill her in such an event. Phillip, stealing aboard the ship, lays a fuse to several kegs of gunpowder making up the cargo. Ramon, who has joined the pirates in the hope of thus completing his purpose of death to Phillip and then saving Julia, jumps from the ship just before the explosion, and is picked up by Phillip, who cannot let him die. The blowing up of the ship is a fine piece of realism.

The foregoing synopsis hardly does justice to the continuous round of surprises in this extraordinary story from the master brain of Louis Joseph Vance. The suspense is continuous and the thrills have plenty of real punch without any gruesomeness that would offend the most critical audience. The dramatic work of Mr. Richman is up to his previous high standard with which all picture fans are familiar in past feature productions.

"The Vixen"

(Fox Film—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THEDA BARA'S return to her vamping ways has no doubt been awaited eagerly by her many followers, and while in "The Vixen" her wicked ways are expressed not so much physically as temperamentally, the effect is somewhat the same. Miss Bara has the thankless role of a cattish woman who tries and tries to ruin the happiness of her sister. Her attempts are successful during about five and a half of the six reels and then the sister and all the men concerned wake up to the fact that she is what she is.

The vixen's methods are simple. When she sees that her sister is beginning to suspect she tells a lie. We think she told about fifty in the picture. And so the construction of the scenario loomed up agreeably easy to the author, whoever Mary Murillo is this time. When the action begins to let down, put another lie in the vixen's mouth and so create ten or a dozen more scenes must have been the general plan followed. The result is that "The Vixen" might stop at the end of the fifth or the end of the fourth reel, just as well as at the end of the sixth.

The aggravating part about it all is that after you have patiently waited the six reels through, there comes no powerful climax to cap the whole thing.

"The Vixen" suffers apart from the repeating ways of the scenario. The way the vixen stuffs her sister and everyone else with lies which they swallow hook, line and sinker is amusing and instead of creating suspense makes you smile. The author has not granted the characters human intelligence.

The direction of J. Gordon Edwards is good enough, although he might have given his players a few lessons in the art of make-up. Every member of the cast offends with lip rouge except

Martin's Awakening—Scene from "The Vixen" (Fox)

Mary Martin. Miss Bara plays the title role for all it's worth. Miss Martin creates a good impression in the somewhat impossible part of the sister. A. H. Van Buren, Herbert Heyes, George Clarke, Carl Gerard and George Odell are the men folks present.

Tom North in New York

TOM North, the well-known and popular exchange manager, just recently in charge of the V-L-S-E office in Seattle, and before that manager of the George Kleine office in San Francisco, is in New York and stopping at the Hotel Knickerbocker, preparatory to opening up an office in New York.

"His Wife's Mother"

(Metro—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

MR. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the inimitable funmakers, are as good as ever in "His Wife's Mother." Through the efficiency of a well-trained office boy Mr. Newlywed avoids taking his wife's mother to the aquarium. As a reward for his kindly efforts, and incidently to elude his family, who want him to take them to Grant's Tomb, he takes the office boy to Coney Island. Coincidence, who is no respecter of persons, brings about an invitation to Mrs. Newlywed and her mother to motor to Coney Island.

His wife's mother, who looks as if she had been the victim of "a brute of a husband," acts just like a jokesmith's mother-in-law. She is on the lookout for trouble, and very soon finds it in the shape of her son-in-law, basking in the sands of Coney Island.

Her suspicions that his sick friend excuses were a ruse, are verified. She runs him not to earth, but to water. Although he tries to escape her in a life boat and dons the lifesaver's clothes, he cannot escape her eagle eye. When led to the dressing room by his wife and his wife's mother, Mr. Newlywed appears at a loss for words.

"The Morals of Hilda"

(Universal-Red Feather—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS "The Morals of Hilda" is based on a situation that always fails to convince, the entire picture is of an unconvincing nature. A couple from some "old country" migrate to America without first having gone through the formality of a marriage ceremony. In their country there were no marriage laws. Passing over the fact that all countries have marriage rituals of some sort or another, it seems rather peculiar that the pair should have rebelled at having their union legalized in America. Licenses aren't very expensive.

Anyway they don't, and in mortification at the manner in which their friends look down upon them, the man leaves the woman. Her boy is adopted by a lady of affluence, and grows to manhood to run for governor of the State. An important plank in his platform is the legitimizing of all children, no matter how obscure their parentage. After election he delivers a speech on this idea, and a crank in the crowd draws a gun and fires, but the ever-watching mother attempting to save her her son is killed herself.

"Twisted Trails"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

IF you want a cracker-jack Western, you will make no mistake in booking "Twisted Trails." It is Western stuff at its best—fast-moving, jammed with thrills, and bringing in numberless riding, roping, and shooting stunts. These specialties are not dragged in by the ears, as is so often the case, but are really necessary for the development of the plot.

Tom Mix is responsible for most of the cowboy feats, and his proficiency in this line does not require comment. Bessie Eyton gives him the best support he has had in years. It is to be hoped that Miss Eyton will continue to play opposite him. Others who appear are Eugenie Besserer, Pat Chrisman, and Joe Ryan.

The locations used are unusually pleasing.

Tom, a cowboy, is persecuted by a dishonest sheriff. He finally leave home, but is chased by the sheriff and his posse. This chase is a thrill from start to finish. Tom finally eludes his pursuers and comes upon a prostrate girl. She has been thrown from her horse while escaping from a man who attacked her.

Tom and the girl fall in love with each other, but find evidence to show that they are brother and sister. Tom's mother disproves this, however, bringing in the old situation of changing babies in an orphan asylum. The girl's brother turns out to be the man who attacked her.

Hampton's Presidency of General Film Not Permanent, Nor Nearly So

New York, N. Y., December 1.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Usually I buy a copy of the News each Tuesday, but in some way last week's issue did not reach me promptly, and I have just noticed your pleasant article relative to General Film matters.

While I thank you most earnestly for the kind things you say about me, I feel that I must advise you that you have rather a wrong slant on the situation.

While it is true that I am technically president of the General Film Company, my tenure of office is for a very, very short time. Someone had to fill in for a little while and the directors were good enough to ask me to undertake the work.

I am doing so and in justice to the General Film Company I want you to know that there is no intention or plan for me to remain here longer than a few weeks. By that time some able man will be chosen to conduct the business of this fine, old Company in an effective manner.

Yours very truly,

Benj. B. Hampton.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

General Film Service

"The Iceman and the Artist." (Kalem. One reel. Tues., Dec. 12)—Another of the Ham and Bud varieties of comedy—nothing particular as to plot, but as Ham and Bud have wormed their way into popular favor, this latest stunt of theirs should not detract from their popularity. Seeing an iceman affectionately greeted by a buxom housewife, Ham and Bud decide to venture in the ice business and purloin a wagon, a load of ice and a team of horses for their purpose. "They" make a success of it, but "Bud" gets the shallow end of the bargain. The picture contains meat for many laughs and doubtless will be well received.

"Reel Life, No. 31." (Gaumont. Mon., Dec. 4.)—Highly instructive and full of interest, showing acres upon acres of land in California given over to the growing of prunes, then follow pictures of the gathering, sorting, drying and packing of the fruit. Modish coiffeurs as being worn for the ball, the dinner and other social events are exquisitely delineated, and as a finality the cause of the spread of disease through the medium of the fly is amply propounded, under the title of "The Diary of a Murderer." The following subtitles are self-explanatory as being recorded by the Honorable Mr. Housefly: "I spent a night in a garbage can that someone neglected to cover up." "I stopped to get a drink from a pool in the gutter." "I played with a cat that I found eating decayed meat." "I happened into a nice home and found the table all set for dinner." "I had a sup of fresh milk." "I kissed and bit a baby on the mouth and on the cheek," and "Passing the same house a few days later, I saw white ribbon draped on the front door." The reel concluded with an exposition of the latest ballroom dances.

See America First, No. 65. (Gaumont. One reel.)—Why go abroad when such beautiful scenery abounds in the glorious U. S.? The house of Gaumont is bringing the above mentioned fact most powerfully to the fore in its geographical series. The latest of these takes in several West Virginia landscapes, including Winding Gulf, a small mountain town, Bellepoint and villages on both sides of the New River; Hinton, a picturesque spot nestling among the hills and ravines of the New River; Sandstone Falls as seen from Sunset Hill, and the tout ensemble is a remarkable piece of photography.

"Twisted Trails." (Selig. Three reels. Mon., Dec. 11.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Road to Fame." (Selig. Sat., Dec. 16.)—This is a maudlin, pointless picture, crudely acted and crudely produced. It will get by only in houses where the audience enjoys anything. Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley appear. Joe leaves little Mary on the farm and goes to the city. There he becomes a pickpocket. Mary and her father go to the city. Joe robs them, but a fellow crook kills him.

"In a Looking Glass." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Dec. 12.)—Not shown for review; the story follows. Roger Pitney, the Stove King, never employed a man in his works if a girl could do the work. When Roger dies young Pitney decides to change all this. He gets a man cashier. One of the girl stenographers looks in her mirror one day while she is powdering her nose, and sees the cashier stealing the safe combination. She catches the cashier and saves the firm's money. Pitney marries the girl and decides that his father was right. In the cast are Richard C. Travers, Nell Craig and Ernest Maupain.

"Is Marriage Sacred?" (Essanay. Three reels, Sat., Dec. 16.)—Will be reviewed next week.

Pathe Exchange

"Luke's Fireworks Fizzle." (Rolin.)—A characteristic slapping and kicking picture in which Lonesome Luke and his associated cavort about in a fireworks factory. There is a good bit of conventional horseplay such as smoking around explosives, and there is some original humor when Luke gets into a rocket fight with another. All in all a highly diverting release in which the Rolin supporting company scores to as good effect as its star.

"Spanish Costumes and Dances." (Split reel.)—Showing in color some of the striking costumes of the Spaniards and a few scenes in which they indulge in native dances. A few entrancing close-ups of Spanish beauties are quite welcome. On the same reel with "Bobby Bear, Investigator."

"Bobby Bear, Investigator." (Split reel.)—This which divides the reel with "Spanish Costumes and Dances" is also in color and shows the clumsy antic of a young bear in his search for excitement. The two subjects make a filler of originality and good entertainment.

Universal Program

"Two Small Town Romeos." (Nestor. Mon., Dec. 11.)—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear here in the roles of country lovers who discover that the city girl has a city fiancee. Well done as this theme goes; amusing to an audience who like these favorites and can laugh at their personal antics.

"The Two Roads." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Dec. 12.)—This is a rapid fire crook story of English origin and atmosphere, which will hold any audience in suspense very satisfactorily. The plot hinges on the not new idea of the discovery of a secret alloy possible to mistake for gold. This discovery is made by a man who is a crook and his daughter decides to go "straight." Other members of the band do not rest until they have trailed the girl to the home of the Cabinet Minister who has bought the secret for the British Government. She has been secured a position there by the chaplain of the prison, who also is invited there as a guest. A safe-blowing is pulled off to secure the papers, the girl is involved in a murder, and the chaplain to save her from the gallows, because of his belief that she is telling the truth, although circumstantial evidence is almost conclusive of her guilt, shields her at the cost of his own reputation by claiming as an "alibi" that she was in his rooms all night. This "lie magnificent" proves to have been unnecessary, as the real murderer is discovered, and then love is rewarded. Edna Flugruth as the girl plays the only important lead very satisfactorily. Aside from the worn out plot, a very good picture.

"Billy the Bandit." (Victor. Tues., Dec. 12.)—A young lady says she prefers bold, fearless men, and so the suitor dresses up as a bandit and carries her off. This comedy is fair. It doesn't stick to the central idea throughout, although it manages to get the laughs anyway. Bill Mason, John Steppling and Peggy Custer are the leads. Steppling directed.

"Green Eyes." (Laemmle. Wed., Dec. 13.)—A fair release in which the wrath of the jealous husband is aroused when his wife is seen with another man. The "villain" turns out to be his own brother who has had trouble with his love affair, and has asked his sister-in-law to straighten things out. Lois Wilson, George Chesboro and Ed Brady are the leads.

"Murdered by Mistake." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 13.)—Dan Russell once more in an uproarious two reeler in which he assumes the roles of the more or less society gentleman and a tramp who looks like him. Some of the business introduced we presume by Director Craig Hutchinson is most original and diverting, particularly that bit where Russell is towed along by a rope, fastened to the nether part of his trousers. Lucille Hutton is opposite Russell.

"It Didn't Work Out Right." (Victor. Thurs., Dec. 14.)—The friends who attempt to straighten out the petty quarrels of two lovers get the worst of the argument finally, their worthy efforts going all astray. This makes a most pleasing light comedy with Helen Slosson, Helen Marten, Stanley Walpole and Joseph Granby in the principal roles. Robert Hill wrote and directed.

"The Lawyer's Secret." (Rex. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 14.)—Jack Nelson and Mollie Malone in a well worked out plot in which a wandering boy, driven from home, is fleeced by a couple of crooked lawyers in order to get the estate coming to him by his father's will. It so happens the lawyers pick an old pal of the boy's from the streets, and use him as their dummy, the result, of course, being that they are prevented from accomplishing their bad purpose. Well acted, above the average in interest.

"Sratched." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 15.)—When the moral effect of a picture is all wrong the chances are that it lacks in dramatic force too. "Scratched" is poor for this reason. A race track gambler causes the downfall and the arrest of another man through influencing him to follow the ponies. The gambler marries the man's sister and later when the victim is released from prison bent on revenge decides to give it all up because his sister is happy. Earl Page who is a type but not an actor, Irene Hunt and Gus Hereshof are the leads.

"I'm Your Husband." (Nestor. Fri., Dec. 15.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Taint of Fear." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Dec. 16.)—A good story is this centering on a study of a coward who when he gets in action against the Mexicans suddenly becomes a hero. He is killed finally, but his regeneration has been complete. This was a fine idea conceived by Allen Holubar, who also plays the lead. In the directing he has incorporated a good many fine touches, but on the other hand a lack of knowledge of military technique and the introduction of heavy firing at close range with few fatalities makes his picture rather unrealistic. There is too much fighting on the whole anyway. But for all that "The Taint of Fear" is a very worthy picture.

"Their Dark Secret." (Joker. Sat., Dec. 16.)—Gail Henry and William Franey in general rough-house built around the single idea of identification by the initials on a man's underwear. B. V. D. unfortunately are rather common initials, hence the mixup in identity and the usual excitement. Mostly running around, average comedy of this type.

V-L-S-E Vitagraph

"Captain Jinks Should Worry." (Vitagraph Jack Daniels Comedy. Nov. 27.)—Advertising for a "worrier" is the novel idea behind this reel. The successful candidate claimed "experience" in this work, because he had had five wives, and the results of his employment justified his claim. He worried every minute, and Captain Jinks could not find anything to worry him. Even his wife leaving him made no impression on this man who had decided to let another carry his burden of troubles for him.

However, there is always an end to such bliss as this, and when wife returned with two handsome twins Captain Jinks sought a sedative—and the sedative made him see four little "Jinks"—and then the worry man lost his job for he could not continue to see the melancholy side of things in the presence of so great a disturbance to his employer. He at last found a reason for being thankful and was converted to the smile-that-won't-come-off class, handing the glooms over to Captain Jinks. Mr. Daniels' facial expression as these events transpire, compared with the sinister gloom of his confederate, make a genuinely funny combination.

Movement Under Way for Children's Matinees in Washington

A MOVEMENT for motion picture matinees for children and boys and girls in the susceptible age has been permanently inaugurated in the Capital City. This was the result of a meeting at the Ebbit House of the Federation of Women's Clubs of the District of Columbia, officials of the public schools, representatives of the local Exchange Managers' Association, members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and ministers from several of the local churches.

The chief aim of these organizations is to offer to the youthful population of the District better, cleaner, and more appropriate pictures—films which this element may thoroughly enjoy. It is realized that some pictures are not made for children nor should they be seen by children, just as some literature should not be read by children and some stage plays should not be seen by children; and some foods, for that matter, are harmful to children. But these very pictures come within the entertainment and pleasure of adults, and should not be barred from the screen just because they are not within the understanding of children. No amusement or business is run entirely for children, or, in fact, for any one age of people if it would be a success.

These various organizations appreciate the fact that the young are impressionable and it is their desire to put within their grasp motion pictures that they will understand and enjoy. There will be no attempt at censorship on the part of those in charge; nor will there be any attempt to make the shows childish or for children alone. Adult attendance will be encouraged.

Ernest L. Thurston, superintendent of the public schools, is taking a lively interest in the movement and at the meeting stated that he would devise some plan whereby he would get the approval and disapproval of the pupils on the various pictures. In this way the organizers of the matinee movement will have some standard for the selection of films, as well as get the trend of the young minds.

C. L. Butner, of the Triangle exchange, and president of the local Exchange Managers' Association, offered hearty co-operation in behalf of the exchanges of the city on condition that there would be nothing that savored of censorship and no attempt at discrimination with theatres that may not be having the matinees under the auspices of the organizations. Having been assured that such was not the object of the movement, he told the assembly that the amangement of the District would do all in their power to supply films, and that the plan is in its experimental stage would offer these without cost where possible.

Among the other exchange managers who addressed the meeting were Frank Spurrier, of Greater Vitagraph, and Sydney B. Lust of Exclusive Program and Selznick productions.

The exhibitors gave hearty support to the plan, remarks being made by Dr. Wm. P. Herbst of the Circle, and W. A. Marceron.

Intelligence Suggests Remedy for Legalized Censorship

MARY GRAY PECK, a member of the Motion Pictures Committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, in the capacity of a representative of the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with the National Board of Review) completed on November 29th, at Pittsburgh, a two months' trip through Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, and Kentucky, speaking in opposition to legalized censorship. She addressed many women's clubs and committees and social and educational bodies. She also talked with individuals such as Governor Capper and members of the Censorship Board of Kansas.

"My eight weeks' tour of the East Central States," she says, "has demonstrated beyond doubt the contention of the National Board of Review that the great first cause of the repeated demands for state and federal censorship is that children all over the country are going to adult shows. Popular discontent with this state of affairs has reached a pitch and volume that command attention from the film industry.

"The movies can't be respecters of persons. Because they began with the roughnecks is no reason why they should not top off with the Puritans. The Puritans have just as much right to Puritan pictures as 'the tired business man' has to a vampire picture. The Puritan is a human being, and he is easily pleased. All he wants is a show guaranteed not to offend the sensibilities to too great an extent.

"It is not that good, clean plays are not produced,—but that the Puritans never know beforehand when they go into the theatre whether the actors are going to offend the canons of good taste or not! That is what arouses their animosity.

"The obvious remedy for this quite unnecessary mutual distrust and dislike is special performances on regular days of selected films about whose character there is no doubt. In providing a regular program, and arranging central exchange facilities, whereby all good features of this character are available to all theatres which would like to offer a young people's program you are providing a comfortable grave for the legal censorship idea. And it is the only grave you ever will succeed in burying that idea in, despite the fact that legalized censorship where established has not made pictures any better in quality than those seen elsewhere. Cleveland, the hotbed of censorship agitation, has found it necessary, in order to secure the desired results, to take up the better films movement in co-operation with the exhibitors.

"There is a nation-wide desire for the young people's program. I have not found a single town where the leaders of the community were not eager for it, and taking steps to secure it. Usually it is frankly regarded as the alternative of some form of censorship. Where an enlightened exhibitor is trying to meet the wishes of his community, friendly co-operation is established. There is mutual regard and understanding.

"But in every instance where children's plays had been running for a year, there was the same complaint that the supply of films was exhausted. Some were out of print, some were not available on account of closed booking, some had been promised and something else substituted, some couldn't be located, etc.

"It is nothing less than a calamity that at the very time the General Federation of Women's Clubs in co-operation with the National Committee on Films for Young People is organizing a nation-wide movement in support of the standardized Young People's Program, there should be this paralysis of exchange facilities. It is analogous to the car shortage on the railroads."

Powell Starts Work on First Rambeau Picture

FRANK POWELL has started work on the first of the productions to be made by the new Frank Powell Producing Corporation and released through the Mutual.

This is a picturization of "The Greater Woman," a play by Algernon Boyesen, which has been acted extensively on the Continent, and in which Marjorie Rambeau, recently signed by Mr. Powell to appear in a series of pictures, will appear.

Supporting Miss Rambeau in "The Greater Woman" are Aubrey Beattie, Mary Steele, Hassan Mussali and Josephine Park, who has just completed an engagement covering a year and a half under the direction of David Belasco in "The Boomerang" at the Belasco theatre.

Cummins Expects to Send Out Many Road Companies

SAMUEL CUMMINS, who has been less than a year in the film business, heads the Phax Pictures Company, 220 West 42nd Street, New York, having exclusive rights to "Race Suicide." The policy of this company is to promote big feature pictures throughout the Eastern States on an extensive scale.

Several months ago he and N. H. Spitzer formed the Cummins-Spitzer Feature Company in Washington, D. C., and purchased "War's Women" for the Southern States.

The intention of the Phax Pictures Company is to send out ten road shows through the State, which will be directly in charge of Mr. Cummins.

Midwest Photoplay Purchases "The Conquest of Canaan"

THROUGH a contract entered into with W. H. Bell, general manager of the Midwest Photoplay Corporation, of Kansas City, Mo., the rights to the Frohman Amusement Corporation's five-part release, "The Conquest of Canaan," for the territory of Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and Missouri, were closed.

Mr. Bell also closed a contract whereby they were granted the distributing rights for the same territory of the Clara Kimball Young productions.

It is a policy of the Midwest Photoplay Corporation to exploit unusual and extraordinary attractions, but run, however, a separate department for program features.

Sherman Method of Handling "Crisis"

"OUR method with 'The Crisis' is to handle it ourselves from Illinois west," says Harry Sherman, of the Sherman-Elliott Company. "In the East we are releasing it to State right buyers. Where we play the show on the road, we do so on a percentage basis only. We expect to have ten companies, carrying about twenty-five men each, of 'The Crisis' out in January."

THESE ARE THE DAYS when everyone has the opportunity for a big profit on his investment.

THE PROBLEM is to separate the "blue sky offering" from the one of real worth.

YOU ARE INVESTING YOUR MONEY IN ADVERTISING.

You have this same problem—especially right now—of separating the "blue sky offering" from the one of real and lasting value.

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS is an advertising investment of real and lasting value. It is planned with but one idea—to have it kept for reference during 1917.

This means that your advertisement in that issue WILL BE KEPT FOR REFERENCE DURING 1917.

RESERVATIONS ARE COMING IN FAST
—THEY STARTED TWO WEEKS AGO.

THE RATES ARE THE SAME FOR BLACK AND WHITE. FOR A SECOND COLOR THE RATES ARE BUT ONE-HALF THE USUAL CHARGE OR $12.50 PER PAGE EXTRA—AND WE INCLUDE FREE USE OF TWO COLOR BORDER PLATES AT THAT RATE

Now is the time to write your reservation on the bottom of this page so as to be secure in a good position, tear it out and mail it back to us today.

We will gladly help you plan your copy if you wish.

PICTURE MUSIC

DID you ever get into a theatre to be greeted by the notes of an out of tune piano, played by a man or girl whose attention was about equally divided between the keys and a piece of gum which was being exercised to the limit of the law? After you had sat down for ten minutes, could you have expressed an opinion as to whether the photoplay was good or bad? It is a nine to one shot that the picture was condemned whether it was the best that had ever been made or the worst. The noise from the piano was to blame—it was not picture music.

The fault was not with the piano—that could be kept in tune and an efficient man or girl could produce effects which would have been pleasing; in other words there was no excuse for not having good PICTURE MUSIC providing the proper steps were taken to insure it. The same thing applies to an orchestra, a unit player or any other musical accompaniment.

PICTURE MUSIC can be defined as "the musical accompaniment to a picture which brings out every change of feeling and action." In order to accomplish this, the musician must be a past master at his art, for unless he has seen the picture previously or unless he has had a considerable amount of help, he cannot do himself justice nor can he make the most of the picture.

This help is particularly necessary in the daily change house where the picture is slapped on the screen as soon as it arrives from the exchange. This is usually about five minutes before the show, and does not give the musician a chance to go over it and prepare his program. This makes it unfair to him, to the picture, to the theatre and hurts the entire industry. It is wrong.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, being "the service paper of the industry," is trying to overcome to the greatest possible extent this trouble. We are placing at the disposal of theatre owners a service which is absolutely free and which should improve the music in the daily change house one hundred per cent. This is the service—We are publishing each week from three to eight cue sheets of the various features. These cue sheets are simple.

1st—They give the title of a suitable musical selection.

2d—They give the musical movement of the selection.

3d—They state the (T) title or (S) scene to which the given piece is to be played.

These details are given every time the scene changes and a new selection is demanded. It must be understood, however, that the selection called for in the cue does not necessarily have to be played. Any piece having the same musical movement can be substituted, this being entirely up to the musician.

In order to make this effective, it is absolutely necessary that every theatre manager should see to it that the theatre or the musician has an adequate musical library, otherwise with or without the service a picture cannot be played properly. Therefore MOTION PICTURE NEWS has gone further in co-operating. If any theatre or musician will send in a list of the music in their library, we will go over it carefully and suggest additions which should be made in order to make it complete. A well stocked library is necessary.

Every exhibitor depends upon the reviews of the various pictures in order to advertise properly. Is it any less important that the musician should also depend upon them? Any musician who tries to play a picture with the best cue sheet ever written without either having seen the film first or read the review for the story should lose his position at once. He is not qualified to render picture music. In order to make this easier we are noting on each published cue sheet the page on which the picture was reviewed. The enforcing of this rule is absolutely up to the house manager, for he is the man who is responsible for the gate receipts.

Space does not allow that we publish musical plots for every feature every week but our service department is in a position to furnish cue sheets for practically every feature, so that all that is necessary is for our subscribers to write in stating the name of their theatre and giving the title of the feature on which they wish help.

In closing let us again call attention to the three important things which the house manager must do—

1st—Insist upon the use of the cue sheet—

2d—Insist upon your musician reading the reviews—

3d—See to it that a complete library is at the musician's disposal.

"A B C of the Motion Picture Operating Room"

The Operating Room—The Equipment Upon Which the Exhibitor's Success or Failure Depends —Size of Room to Enable Operator to Put Forth His Best Efforts, and Finally—The Operator.

ONE of the most important things to be considered in the building of a modern motion picture theatre, and to which practically very little consideration is given is the operating room. Managers and exhibitors spend thousands of dollars in building a magnificent theatre, the furnishings and decorations of which are all that could be desired in the way of ornateness, and yet evince but little interest in the most vital part of the whole thing—the operating room. It has been found that the larger the operating room is, the better the operator will do his work.

The day has long since passed when an exhibitor can get an operator who will consent to remain in a 3 x 5 "coop" for ten or twelve hours on a stretch. It is not only detrimental to a man's health, but the standard of men who are responsible for the putting over of the producer's best efforts have been raised to a higher level, and to-day the word "operator" in its broadest sense means one who has the ability to put high class work upon the screen, and applies that ability. No operating room should be less than 6 x 8 feet, and at least 8 feet in height, with proper ventilating facilities to enable the operator to have a continual supply of pure fresh air.

Best Material for Booth.

The ideal operating room is constructed of concrete, although in certain States I believe the laws specify that they shall be constructed of asbestos, which is, of course, fireproof, but to my mind, should not meet with any great favor with up-to-date exhibitors.

For use with traveling shows, and private exhibitions in schools, churches and halls the asbestos "booth" meets every requirement, but in regular motion picture theatres where the tendency is to carry out the illusion of a theatrical performance instead of a projected picture, it is essential that there should be an absence of all noise emanating from the operating room, so that the illusion can be carried out more perfectly. This cannot be done where an asbestos booth is used, for any sound, such as the dropping of a tool, or the voice of the operator (when things go wrong) is greatly magnified and very disturbing when overheard by the patron.

A concrete room the walls of which are of a thickness of six inches or more and with a vent flue of adequate dimensions, and whose only openings are the port holes for lenses and operators' lookouts, and of course, the door, while costing a little more to install, will give much better satisfaction in the long run.

Some exhibitors might say that the concrete operating room is not practicable on account of its great weight, but that objection would not hold good if the operating room were located where it should be—ON THE MAIN FLOOR. The day is not far distant when exhibitors will see the folly of sticking the "booth" up among the rafters and expecting the operator to get perfect results. "It can't be did." It never has and never will.

Absence of Fire Risk.

The greatest recommendation for the cement operating room is it is positively fireproof, and if equipped with the proper shutters covering the port holes, and these shutters held in place with a fusible link which will as soon as a fire occurs drop into place, the fire hazard would be reduced far below the minimum. In the first place, it is not the actual fire that causes the crowd to rush madly about trampling over each other in the struggle to escape. It is the SIGHT OF SMOKE OR FLAME, and the possibility of any smoke or flame entering the auditorium to alarm an audience where a concrete operating room houses the machines is reduced to almost zero.

The New York State Law regarding the construction of operating rooms is as follows:

Extract from New York State Laws, Chap. 25, 1911.

General Specifications: Operating booth shall be constructed with a framework of angle irons not less than one and one quarter inches, by three sixteenths of an inch thick, the adjacent members being joined firmly with angle plates of iron. The iron members of the frame shall be spaced not more than four feet apart on the sides and not more than three feet apart on front, back and top of such booth. The fire resisting material provided for in section 209 of this article (asbestos covering over iron frame or some fire resisting material equally strong) shall completely cover the top, sides, and all joints of such booth. The sheets of such fire resisting material shall be at least one quarter of an inch in thickness, and shall be securely attached to the iron framework by means of iron bolts or rivets. The floor space covered by such booth shall be covered with said fire resisting material not less than three-quarters of an inch in thickness. There shall be provided for the booth a door not less than two feet wide by six feet high, consisting of an angle iron frame covered with sheets of said fire resisting material one-quarter of an inch in thickness, and attached to the booth by hinges, in such a manner that the booth shall be kept closed at all times when not used for ingress or egress. The operating window, one for each machine to be operated therein and one for the operator thereof, shall be no longer than is reasonably necessary to secure the desired service, and shutters of said fire resisting material shall be provided for each window. When the windows are open the shutters shall be so suspended and arranged that they will automatically close the window openings upon the operating of some suitable fusible or mechanical releasing device.

Risks Can Be Lessened.

These specifications, while they have some good points, could be greatly improved and made of greater value to the exhibitor as well as safeguarding the patrons to a greater extent.

One of the prime necessities in an operating room floor is that it be absolutely solid and free from any vibration. Even a slight vibration will materially injure the projection, especially if the vibration be such as to cause the mechanism to rock. And the effect upon the screen would be that of a picture trying to do a "hula-hula" dance.

One of the finest constructed operating rooms I ever saw was in Bishop's theatre, Hoboken, N. J., which cost a considerable sum to erect but has been well worth the expenditure. Its construction was as follows: A wooden floor was laid in the balcony resting on a large "I" beam to sustain the weight of the booth when finished; after the wooden floor was laid angle irons were laid upon the floor and these were joined to upright angle irons, which were continued across the top, forming a steel cage; the angle iron being placed six inches apart, after which they were covered with metal lath, and then cement was put on over this and allowed to dry and harden; the thickness of the walls being approximately four inches. The floor was covered with a three-inch layer of fire brick and over this was spread a surface of cement; when floor, walls and ceiling had been thoroughly dried out they were "floated" with plaster, giving a smooth surface, after which it was painted with water color to blend with the general decorating scheme of the theatre, making it fireproof, burglar-proof and sound-proof.

An extra large vent flue in the ceiling which led straight up to the open sky, was installed to carry off any smoke should a fire ever occur, and in this instance the installation of such an operating room greatly lessened the insurance rate on this particular theatre.

The equipment of the operating room is another item of great importance. No matter how well the operating room be constructed, it is hardly to be expected that the operator can produce good results with old, wornout, or second hand equipment. The equipment must be the best that money can buy, and it must be maintained in such a manner as to give results all the time, and with the improvements that are being made from time to time the wide awake exhibitor should keep posted and be among the first to take advantage of these improvements and give his patrons the benefit.

Color Cinematography

The Kodachrome Process—Negatives Converted into Colored Dye Positives—The Master Positives—Mr. Capstaff's Cinematograph Printer—How Natural Color Cinefilms Are Made by P. D. Brewster

SOMETHING like two years ago the Eastman Kodak Company introduced a two-color process of producing photographic transparencies in colors, this being known to the photographic profession as the "Kodachrome" process. Although this system of color photography has been used in portraiture for some time past, the Kodak Company have refrained from introducing the Kodachrome process extensively among amateurs, because, being a two-color process, it is not so efficient for rendering landscapes as it is for reproducing the warmer hues met with in portrait photography.

The Kodachrome process has aroused great interest among photographers, however, and as the working details of the system are now available, and as Mr. John G. Capstaff (of the Eastman Research Laboratory) who perfected the process has also devised apparatus whereby cinematograph films in colors may be produced by this system, it will prove instructive to explore the details of the procedure involved and the apparatus employed in working the process.

The Kodachrome Process Outlined

The chemical manipulations of the Kodachrome process and the method of imparting color to the photographic images will best be understood by considering the making of a color transparency on glass plates, which is accomplished as follows: Two panchromatic plates are exposed simultaneously (by means of a special camera) or in quick succession (as with a repeating back) through orange-red and blue-green filters respectively. The exact transmissions of the taking filters need not concern us here as the transmissions of suitable filters for two-color processes have been considered in a former installment, and will be dealt with at length in a forthcoming article.

These red and green sensation negatives having been developed and washed are next immersed (either before or after fixing) in a bath containing Potassium Ferricyanide, Potassium Bromide, Potassium Bichromate, Acetic Acid and Potassium Alum.

Bleaching and Dyeing the Negatives

This bath bleaches the developed negative images to an almost colorless deposit and at the same time tans (renders insoluble) those portions of the emulsion which have been acted upon by light and the developer (the negative images in other words). The plates are now fixed in a Hypo bath and well washed. The fixing operation may be accomplished immediately after development if necessary to the accurate judging of the bleaching operation, but since the bleaching solution causes the re-formation of silver bromide the plates must be fixed again anyway after they are bleached. To save time it is therefore advisable to postpone fixing until the images have been bleached. After washing, the developed and bleached negatives are next dyed in solutions of acid dyes complementary in color to the respective filters through which they were photographed. It is interesting to consider just what occurs in the dyeing operation. The bleaching bath, as previously stated, has tanned the exposed portions of the now bleached negatives and in this insoluble condition the negative images cannot take up any dye and therefore remain clear. The unexposed portions of the plate become dyed however and since the unexposed portions are the inverse of the exposed portions (or negative images) we have, upon completion of the dyeing operation, positive images in clear dye and complementary in color to the filters through which they were respectively made.

When sufficiently dyed the plates are immersed for a few minutes in a weak bath of acetic acid and when washed and dried are bound together with the colored dye images in register. Color transparencies produced by the Kodachrome process, as above outlined, are most pleasing to the eye and it seems but natural that Mr. Capstaff should have attacked the proposition of making cinematographic color films along similar lines.

The Master Positives

Before describing the manner in which the natural color cinematographic films are produced it should be emphasized that in working the Kodachrome process the original negatives are converted into a colored positive. If any duplicates of a subject are desired it is necessary therefore to make positive transparencies from the original negatives before they are bleached and dyed up. These positive transparencies are called Master Positives as all subsequent copies are made from them, and while they bear positive images, these Master Positives correspond to the original negatives of ordinary photographic processes.

In producing natural color cinematograph positives by this process a film negative is photographed (on panchromatic film stock) through orange-red and blue-green filters, the red and green sensation images alternating upon the negative film strip as in the Kinemacolor process.

After development and fixing a Master Positive is printed from the original negative. The colored positives for use in the projecting machine are produced from the Master Positive by the use of an optical printing machine showin diagrammatically by A and B, Fig. 17.

The Printing Machine

A, Fig. 17, shows the exposure-gate of the printer, which it will be noted, is provided with tracks and exposure apertures for two film strips. F is the positive film stock which travels downward, while M is the Master Positive (corresponding to a negative) which travels in the opposite direction or upward. Exposure is made on the positive film F at the aperture E which is just the size of one regulation film image. The Master Positive

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Care of Motor Generators

Edward Sprague, Ohio: What are the most important points to be considered in taking care of a motor-generator set? My manager intends to install one of these sets and, as I am to be in charge of it, would like all the information I can get.

Answer: While your question calls for considerable space to answer it properly I will do so in the hope that other operators besides yourself will benefit by it. Mr. S. H. Martin, president of the Northwestern Electric Company, Chicago, Ill., gave me the following hints and I trust that they will be of much value to you:

Keep both the interior and exterior of the motor free from dirt of any description. The exterior frame can be wiped off, while a small hand bellows will be of great help in keeping the interior parts and windings clean.

The bearings can be prevented from excessive heating and wear by proper lubrication. When linings of bearings become unduly worn, they must be replaced with new one AT ONCE. The oil wells should be filled with a good grade of clean mineral oil; the oil level being nearly at the top of the overflow hole of the oil filler.

The oil should be drained out about every sixty days, and replaced with fresh, clean oil. The oil rings should move freely and carry sufficient oil up to the bearings. The brushes should also have a free movement in their holders at all times, and should make a firm contact across the full face of the brush, bearing firmly against the commutator.

Wants List of Questions

M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida, writes: Enclosed please find check in payment for one year's subscriptions to the NEWS. I have been an operator for the past four years, and have numerous books on electricity and projection, and, above all, I have the Projection Department of the NEWS since you have been its editor, and these copies I will always keep. I am secretary of the local and a member of the Examining Board, and if it is no trouble to you I would like to have you send me a series of questions as you may think proper to ask new applicants. Thanking you in advance for an early reply, and wishing you all kinds of success.

Answer: As much as I would like to, it is quite impossible to do as you ask in the columns of this department. A series of questions is of very little value unless you have at least two or three hundred, and are able to give each candidate a sufficient number to enable him to prove his competency, and yet keep him from informing prospective members as to the nature of the examination, which would enable them to pass without any difficulty. Examinations to be of value must cover such a large field of questions that it would take some time to compile them, and then to figure the percentage would take a whole lot more time. I will, though, do this for you. As fast as I am able, in my spare time, I will try and compile a list of questions that may be of value to you in the examining of applicants, but this will take some time, so do not become impatient if you do not hear from me as soon as you expect. Reciprocating to you and your local the kind wishes extended me, and I assure you that I will do all in my power to further the interests of your local or any other local of the I. A.

To Prevent Belt-Slipping.

Harry Meyers, South Carolina, writes: The belt on my take-up and also the motor belt are continually slipping, and if I make them shorter they cause too great a strain on the motor and the film. Can you advise me how to remedy this?

Answer: The slipping of belts does become very annoying, and oftentimes where a belt will be perfectly tight at the beginning of the day's run it will, as soon as the machine becomes warmed up, gradually stretch and positively refuse to do its work. This may be overcome by the use of rosin on the belts. If the belts are dry it would be a good plan to rub a little cator oil, which acts as a dressing, and then sprinkling a little powdered rosin on the belt which will prevent its slipping and may save you from a more serious accident should the fire shutter on your machine fail to operate properly.

Compensarc or Rheostat on Either Machine.

G. W. B., Ohio (name of city suppressed by request), writes: Read your dope in the NEWS, and find it to be of great benefit. Here is a question I want to ask and, if possible, would like to have you accompany it with a sketch. I have a rheostat and a compensarc and two arcs, and I wish to connect them up so as to be able to use either the compensarc or rheostat on either arc. Your answer will decide an argument between myself and another operator. Hoping that you make the Projection Department of the NEWS better than all others, I remain, sincerely yours.

Answer: The province of this department is not to decide arments, but to try and be of assistance to operators who are in trouble by helping them out as far as I am able, and if I am not in possession of the information sought, to obtain it for them. Feeling that the diagram you ask for may be of some value to other operators, I am complying with your request, and submit the following:

In the diagram you will see that with the use of a 4-pole double throw switch, and the method of wiring, it is possible to use either the compensarc or rheostat on either machine. It will also allow the lamp not in use to be lit, using current through the rheostat about three or four minutes before finishing the reel on the other machine, and at the changeover all you would have to do would be to throw over the 4-pole switch and pull the one on the machine as soon as the reel on that machine was over. For your kind wishes I extend thanks, and while I make no claims to being a projection expert with the help of men like you, it may be possible for me to fulfill the last part of your letter. Rome wasn't built in a day, you know.

The Projection Department of Motion Picture News Is Authoritative

Height of Screen and Size Picture.

J. A. Kyle, Canada, writes: Understanding that you give information to managers and operators without cost, I am writing to ask you the following: What size picture should we show, when our building is 30 feet wide by 100 feet in length. What should be the height of the screen, that is how far above the floor level should the screen be placed? We would appreciate an early reply for which we thank you in advance.

Answer: The Projection Department wishes to be of all possible service to the exhibitor and operator, and is ever willing to procure any information that is possible to obtain that will benefit our readers.

The width of your theatre is very much narrower than is usually found where the length is so great. In a very narrow house it is not necessary to have a picture in excess of twelve feet in width, and where the picture is of such a size, the first row of seats may be placed about eighteen feet from the screen, without any evil effect being felt by those seated so close to the screen.

Your screen should be located so that its center is as nearly on the level with the observer's eyes as it is possible for it to be, and yet it must be placed high enough so that those seated in the last row can see the bottom of the picture without craning their necks, even though the seats in front of them be occupied. The architect who drew up the plans for your theatre should have considered the slope necessary to meet these requirements.

No Trouble at All

William Hoffman, Jackson, Tenn.: Am using a G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifier, on 110 volts 60 cycle A. C. Rectifier is set for 40 amperes, but when I start my arc it hisses so badly that it is enough to drive one crazy. Lower carbon is seldom without a tip, and if it is no trouble to you wish you would make some suggestion that will help me overcome this.

Answer: You evidently carry too short an arc, from the fact that your lower carbon has a tit continually. This is about the only suggestion I can make: Handle your carbons as though you were getting true direct current, for with the use of the Rectifier that is what it practically amounts to. Set your carbons straight up and down, with the lamp tilted at an angle, having the upper carbon a trifle behind the lower, and if the Rectifier is delivering the amperage you state, a 5/8 cored upper carbon and 1/2-inch hard lower carbon will give you perfectly good results. When striking the arc do not freeze the carbons; gently touch them together and then draw them apart until your arc is 1/8 of an inch or more in length, giving the carbons a chance to form a good crater, and when you have done this you should experience no further trouble.

Hudson County Operators' Annual Ball.

THE Motion Picture Operators of Hudson County, N. J., Local 384, I. A. T. S. E., are to hold their Third Annual Ball on the evening of Thursday, December 7, at Grand View Auditorium, Ogden avenue and Franklin street, Jersey City, N. J.

The committee in charge, consisting of Edward W. Bordman, chairman; Conrad Daubener, Jr., Harvey Sapp, Jack Hertner, William Meyer, Louis Ulffers, Edward Dougherty, Wm. Ebenau and J. Rick have worked hard to make this affair one of the most brilliant ever held in Hudson County.

Dancing will begin at 8.30 p. m., to the strains of music furnished by Oscar Rauch's Orchestra. Several movie stars have promised to attend and lend their efforts to make the affair as great a success as the boys hope for.

The local maintains offices at 123 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J., in charge of Walter A. Bemis, president of the local, and where the other members of the Executive Board, consisting of E. W. Bordman, secretary-treasurer; Harvey Sapp, vice-president; Conrad Daubener, Jr., recording secretary, and John Giles, sergeant-at-arms, may be found for the transaction of business.

The department wishes for this local a most successful and profitable affair, and the committee that has been chosen to attend to the details is one that will work day and night to make it so. This being the local of which I am a member, it is quite natural that I should be more than anxious for their success, and, if it is at all possible, I hope to be one of them and lend them any assistance that may be in my power to make the Third Annual Ball one grand, huge, smashing success—socially and financially.

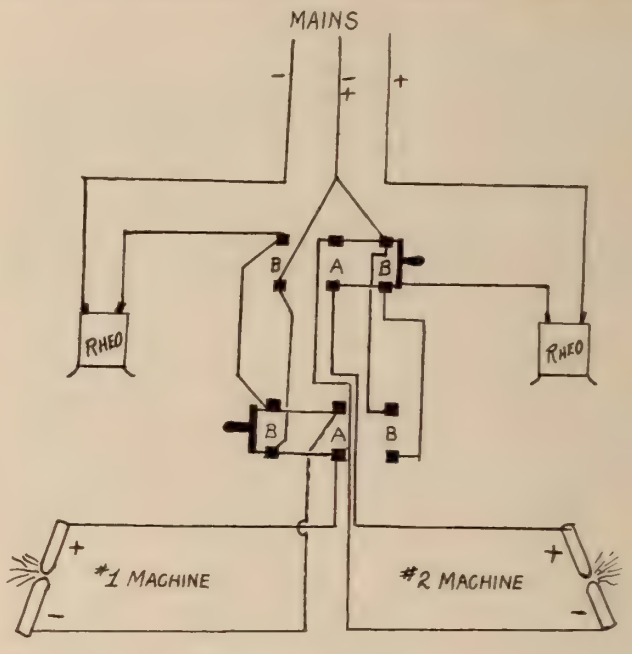
R. A. FOOTE, Round Mountain, Nevada, writes: "Would like to ask as a favor, if you could tell me where I can get parts for a Pathe motion picture machine. Also if the revenue tax has been reduced."



Answer: "That's what I am here for, to try and answer any questions that may be sent in to this department. I am advised that the Pathe Exchange, Inc., 25 West 45th street, New York, has some parts on hand for the Pathe machine, and if you will write a letter addressed to the company and to the attention of Mr. Franconi, stating just what parts you desire, he will probably be able to furnish you with them.

I did not quite understand the last paragraph of your letter. If you mean revenue tax on machine parts, would say there is no such thing.

Don't forget that the department is always open and willing to be of any assistance possible, and let us hear from you again.

How One Operator Overcomes the Necessity to Hunt for Extra Fuses

THE following diagram shows how one operator overcomes the necessity of hunting for extra fuses should anything go wrong during the operation of either machine from the blowing of a fuse. You will see that he has his machines so wired as to be able to throw either rheostat on either machine should a fuse blow on the other. This is an ingenious and practical connection, doing away with any stop or delay while the picture is being projected.

New Light Shield

THE department is in receipt of a new light shield to protect the eyes of the operator from the glare of light emitted by the light beam of the arc from the condenser mount to the aperture plate.

The device consists of a rectangle of colored glass about 4 x 6 inches, in a metal rim; the rim is mounted by means of a ball and socket joint to the hood of the lamp house. It can be adjusted to any position, so that whether the operator is turning by hand, or using a motor, he can observe the light through the glass without injury to his eyes. It can be quickly turned aside when not in use, and can also be adjusted to any height, making it a convenience for either a short or tall operator.

C. D. Weakley

Mr. C. D. Weakley, proprietor of the Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo., is not only a successful manager, but is the inventor of the "Ideal," as this light shield has been named. He, in collaboration with A. A. Hughes, operator of the above-named theatre, having worked for some time to perfect this little device which has been patented in several foreign countries, and on which patents are pending in the United States.

In a personal letter to me Mr. Weakley states: "Mr. Hughes could not possibly read a paper after running a show because of the fact that he would lose his place. (Avoiding the technical name, he was troubled with what is known as double vision, I take it.—Ed.) Now, he has no trouble whatever, and in addition is able to see his picture, through the use of this shade, in the same light as the audience, which is not possible when wearing colored spectacles, for the operator is unable to get the normal use of his eyes without removing them, and he must remove them at times to do other things which becomes very annoying, and also tends to make some men nervous. The 'Ideal' has fully proven its worth to us after two years of actual use, and we feel that it shows a touch of humanity for the 'man at the machine' to make his work easier and more comfortable.

"I have examined this device most carefully, and believe that with one slight change the 'Ideal' will be of great benefit to operators who use light shields upon their machines. The device is well made and should last a lifetime, and managers who have any regard for the preservation of their operators' eyes would do well to look into the matter further."

License Matter Before Court Again

THE United States Supreme Court is to decide whether or not the owners of a patent involving improvements in a motion picture projection machine can limit the use thereof to the exhibition of films manufactured by firms licensed by the owners of the patent.

The court has just granted a writ of certiorari bringing before it the case of the Motion Picture Patents Company against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Universal Film Exchange of New York and the Prague Amusement Company. According to the brief of the appellant in the case, it is the owner of certain patents for improvements in projection machines and has granted to the Precision Machine Company the right to use the same, subject to certain conditions and the payment of royalty. One of the restrictions is that machines shall be used only for the projecting of pictures containing the invention of reissued letters patent leased by a licensee of the plaintiff and upon terms to be fixed by the latter and complied with by the user while the machine is in use and while the plaintiff owns the patents.

The Court of Appeals held that the first condition relating to the use of the machine, only in connection with film obtained from specially designated parties, is a condition violative of the Clayton Act and therefore void and unenforcible. The plaintiff in the case denies that this is so in that it is not engaged in commerce within the meaning of that law, but is a mere holding company, whose sole property, patents, is of an incorporeal, intangible nature and not susceptible of being made the subject of commerce, within the meaning of the law.

The plaintiff company holds that the amusement company, when it saw from a perusal of the name plate on its machine that it could be used only "upon terms to be fixed by the Motion Picture Patents Company and complied with by user while it is in use" was put under legal obligation. Firstly, to ascertain upon what terms he could lawfully use the machine obtained from the company's licensee by him. And that he cannot now be heard to say that he did not know what those terms were, when upon inquiry he could readily have ascertained. He also feared to proceed with a use of the machine that was not authorized was to infringe the patent.

The counsel for the Motion Picture Patents Company states in this brief that the case presents for the determination of the United States Supreme Court the following questions of great public concern: Whether or not a corporation which is a mere patent-holding company, and that neither makes, uses nor sells the patented article, but only licenses others to make and sell such article under restrictions as to use, is engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Clayton Act and of the Commerce Clause of the Constitution of which it is predicated; whether or not the restrictions as to the use of a patented article imposed upon a purchaser at the time of the purchase of such article, recognized by the court as valid and enforcible in a previous case, are still valid under a later decision of the court; whether or not notice of conditions or restrictions as to use applied to a patented article, such as present in this case, is sufficient to put a purchaser of the article upon inquiry and to charge him with notice of the facts which such inquiry would have developed, and render him guilty of infringement for a use without compliance with such conditions.

EARL A. DYER.

Horsley Light Shift Patented

DAVID HORSLEY has just received word from the patent office in Washington that he has been granted a patent on his device for an automatic light shift in printing films.

While this word will doubtless interest those connected with the technical end of the film business, it probably will also interest exhibitors who look upon photographic quality as one of the essentials of good picture production.

Film printing establishments have always been troubled with a varying density of light in exposed negative, caused by changing light conditions, errors in judgment on the part of the camera man, etc. For instance, a scene taken in bright sunlight will have different density than a scene under artificial light. Both these scenes must be made uniform in light and this can only be accomplished in the printing.

In the past the variation of light was overcome as much as possible by the printing machine operator, but mistakes were frequent and costly. With Mr. Horsley's new device the operator has nothing to do with changing the lights, as the automatic arrangement instantly and automaticaly changes the intensity of the printing light to its proper proportion with every scene and as soon as the first picture reaches the printing window.

Mr. Horsley's light shift insures uniform printing throughout a picture, besides a clarity which could not be maintained heretofore. It expedites the work of the developing department, which does not have to stop to overcome constantly occurring errors made in the printing room, and also eliminates the mistakes of the printing machine operator in making light shifts.

Mr. Horsley is now using the light shift in his Los Angeles plant, and the prints made with its use show a marked improvement over results obtained by the old method.

M is shifted by its intermittent movement in sets of two images (a red sensation image r and a green sensation image g) at each shift and is illuminated by the printing light at an aperture D which is equal in height to the size of two film images.

The positive film stock has emulsion on both sides and, as might be inferred, an impression from the green sensation images is printed on one side of the positive strip and the red sensation positive images are printed on the other side of the film in exact register with the green sensation images. Both printings are made simultaneously in a manner best understood by reference to B, Fig. 17, which is a diagram showing the path of the light rays through Mr. Capstaff's optical cinematograph printer.

Printing the Color Positive

In B, Fig. 17, F is the positive film stock while M is the Master Positive which is to be printed from. The two film strips are, of course, moved and fed by intermittents of customary type and the printing light is shut off from the sensitive double coated positive stock during the interval of the film's movement by two shutters, S-1 and S-2 respectively in the diagram B, Fig. 17. The respective red and green sensation images of the Master Positive, when in position before their double aperture in the printer gate, are illuminated from a common light source by the two reflecting prisms P-1 and P-2. One of these two prisms is located the height of one film image above the other, but as it is proposed to project both images in exact superposition upon the opposite sides of the positive strip F, the light ray from the uppermost prism is brought down into line with the light ray from the other prism by means of a double reflecting prism P-3, located as shown in B, Fig. 17.

The light beams from the respective red and green sensation images of the Master Positive now proceed (in directions indicated by the arrows) to the prisms P-4 and P-5 where they are again reflected and traverse the lenses L-1 and L-2, Fig. 17. They are projected by these lenses on to the prisms P-6 and P-7 from which the images are reflected onto the sensitive surfaces of the double coated positive film F.

When developed the film F shows negative images, which are converted into colored dye positives in the manner outlined in the preceding description of the "Kodachome" process. We have discussed, in previous installments, various methods by which a double coated film positive may have the images on its two sides so treated that the coloring of one set of sensation images does not affect the images on the opposite side which are, of course to be given a different color.

Apparatus for Staining Double Coated Film

But something out of the ordinary has been patented for the Kodak Company in the line of devices for use in coloring differently the respective sides of double coated cinematograph films. This device described in U. S. Patent No. 1,168,286, consists of an airtight drum with a flexible rubber covering. The film is wound spirally around the drum in well known manner after which the drum is inflated (pumped full of air). This causes the rubber covering of the drum to come into close contact with the innermost side of the film, so that when the drum is immersed in a dye bath the images on the side of the film next the drum are not accessible to the dye solution. When the images on one side have been colored, washed and dried, the film is then wound upon the drum with its other side outermost and immersed in a dye bath of complementary or suitable color and again processed.

It will be apparent that the images of cinematograph films prepared as outlined above approximate in appearance the hues of the objects photographed and are capable of reproducing this coloring on the screen when projected on an ordinary projecting apparatus (with no filters or attachments) and at ordinary projecting speed.

Although most natural color motion picture films on which the images are color reproductions of the subject photographed are prepared by a subtractive process, it is also possible to produce a motion picture positive having natural color images by additive methods.

Brewster's Color Process

This has been successfully done by Mr. P. D. Brewster of East Orange, N. J. As Mr. Brewster has, within the past year or two, introduced an excellent system of producing color transparencies and a highly efficient color camera with which two plates may be exposed simultaneously (through red and green color filters) it is not surprising to note that he has also devised means of producing natural color cinematographic positives of good projecting quality.

To begin with Mr. Brewster has patented the double coated film (U. S. Patent No. 1,145,968) both for use in photographing the negatives and the printing of positives. In the description which follows it will be seen that the process is based upon additive methods due to the use of double coated film in making the original negative. In this respect the Brewster process of color cinematography departs from all others which we have described. By using one of the emulsioned surfaces of the negative film as a color filter the exposed and developed image deposits on the two sides of the film are so situated that when a positive is printed and dyed up, it may be projected additively, as will be appreciated after a careful study of U. S. Patent No. 1,191,941, or of the following outline of Brewster's methods:

The negative film stock used in the camera is doubled coated (emulsion on both sides). The side of the film toward the camera lens has a transparent emulsion sensitized to blue and green, while the emulsion on the other side of the film is either panchromatic (sensitive to all colors) or sensitive to red, orange and yellow. To produce a transparent emulsion suitable for the front (toward the lens) side of the film it might be necessary to substitute silver-chloride for the customary silver bromide emulsion, but, according to Brewster, an "unripened" bromide emulsion would also serve the purpose.

In order to make this transparent emulsion sensitive to the blue-green and green, it must of course be sensitized with a dye—a good one for the purpose in view being Acridine Orange N. O. which is of orange yellow color.

Making the Negative

Let us now see what happens when the double coated negative stock, prepared as above outlined, is exposed in the camera. In making the exposures a light yellow compensating filter is preferably used on the lens to screen off the ultra-violet and violet light. The rays from the lens now reach the transparent blue and green sensitive emulsion and a record of all blue and green in the subject photographed is impressed on the front surface of the double coated film. The orange colored dye with which the front emulsion was sensitized (to blue and green) will absorb, or hold back, the blue and green rays, but will transmit (allow to pass through) the yellow orange and red rays from the lens. Hence a record of the red, orange and yellow of the subject photographed is impressed on the red sensitive emulsion with which the back of the film strip is coated. It will further be appreciated that the exposures on the front and back emulsions are in exact register.

After being developed, fixed and washed the film images are bleached and dyed up with basic dyes leaving the highlights clear. In contradistinction to some subtractive processes which we have previously considered the blue-green sensation side of this double negative is dyed blue-green (instead of its complementary) while the red sensation images, on the other side of the film, are dyed orange-red. We now have a color negative bearing negative images of the same color as the light which formed them.

THE speed and quality of the sensitive emulsion, the strength and toughness of the base, the consistent excellence covering a long period of years, the marked dependability—these are the qualities that have made it desirable, for your interests and our own, to place the identifying stencil mark

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

The Motion Picture Pianist

WHEN I speak of the motion picture pianist, I mean any musician connected with this branch of the profession, but use the phrase because the pianist is usually the one who predominates, often being the sole "orchestra" in evidence, or acting as leader in such theatres, where there is an orchestra. As the photoplay has made such rapid strides, and even holds greater things in view, the musical end of the business has proportionately grown, making, as I said before, the position of the pianist a very important one. It is a very common thing to walk into a picture-vaudeville house today and hear the orchestra rendering a popular classic or a selection from a comic opera that you have heard in some of the leading Broadway productions; but while the management seems to cater to the patrons' requirements, in every detail, little attention seems to be given to their desires, as far as music is concerned.

Occasionally we meet with a poster outside of the so-called "picture" house, which reads:

SPECIAL FEATURES
TONIGHT
WITH GOOD MUSIC.

Or an interested patron will request a favorite selection rendered for his or her special benefit, but outside of this, there is not much effort made on the part of the management or the pianist to please the audiences; the selection of overtures or other music being left entirely to the pianist or the librarian.

In view of this, I have a suggestion to offer, which I believe will interest those who have been kind enough to read thus far. The motion picture screen is used for purposes other than which its name implies. Colored slides for illustrated songs; slides for lectures and announcements of every conceivable description are thrown on the screen.

What I want to suggest is this, why not utilize this very screen, on which such a variety of things are exhibited, in asking the audience to leave their requests for a favorite musical number at the box-office? An announcement like the following would be appropriate.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,
THE MANAGEMENT ANNOUNCES THAT
PATRONS CAN HEAR THEIR FAVORITE MUSIC PLAYED BY OUR ORCHESTRA BY LEAVING THEIR REQUESTS AT THE BOX-OFFICE.

Of course, where only a piano is used the wording can be changed accordingly. The average house-manager rarely gives this matter a thought, as he has other numerous things on his mind, which demand more serious attention, or which are vital to the success of the business. Then it is up to some one else, and who would fit into the position better than the one who is in charge of the music? Where he has no such authority it ought to be an easy matter for him to induce those who have, to get on to the idea. A good live manager will never object to listening to suggestions from his subordinates, especially if they merit attention and tend to improve conditions. If you take the audience into your confidence and prove to them, through the medium suggested, that you have their interest at heart, you will naturally win their applause and approval. While I have never seen such an announcement, I do not claim originality for the idea, as there is no doubt that it has already been attempted by someone somewhere, but it has not become commonplace. Some managers will say that the box-office will be flooded with requests to such an extent that it would be impossible to please all and that by acceding to the wishes of a few, the majority would be displeased. This could be easily overcome. Discretion and good judgment on the part of the manager, combined with knowledge of human nature and how to cater to and handle the public are the only assets necessary to conduct this end of the business in a manner satisfactory to all concerned.

Other announcements could be thrown on the screen which would take care of this side of the question and unless a manager is absolutely indifferent (or too mercenary) to bother with such items, there is no reason why the orchestra should not work in harmony with the patrons.

Announcing Overtures

Another good idea I have in mind is to enlighten the audience as to what selection is being rendered. Many people enjoy an overture and are very interested as to its title. Of course, in productions these titles generally appear on the program, but in the class of entertainment to which these remarks allude, efforts are seldom made to convince the audience that the music is really part of the entertainment. I have run across a few houses in the West and Middle West where this is done. I have in mind a finely equipped picture-house (no vaudeville) in Kansas City, Mo., which is fortunate enough to have a ladies' orchestra. These ladies are high-grade musicians and it was a great pleasure for me to drop into this place and I passed a very pleasant evening, with good music and pictures. While I could not foresee the nature of the pictures, I could always rely upon high-grade music. One evening upon entering this place I was surprised to hear an excellent rendition of "O Promise Me" (from Robin Hood). As I walked down the aisle of this theatre and studied the faces of the audience, it was evident that it was composed largely of music-lovers. Both the good judgment of the exhibitor and the excellent work of the orchestra attracted the finer element in the town, and it was a very common sight to see an automobile drive up to the place from which would alight a family, bent on enjoying a quiet, pleasant and instructive evening.

A good way to bring your audience into closer proximity with the music is to announce the overture which will accompany a picture. The following suggestion might be carried out successfully:

THE NEXT PICTURE WILL BE "FAUST"
ACCOMPANIED BY MUSIC FROM THE OPERA "FAUST," BY GOUNOD

Where Ignorance Is Not Bliss

Will the audience appreciate it? The question is answered without even considering that each selection announced is educating the people. Have you ever heard this remark: "I wonder

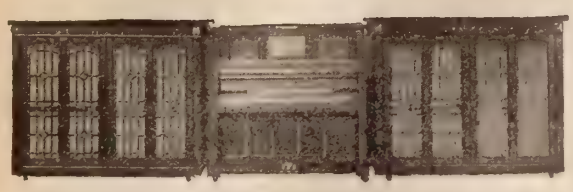
Ideas of Architectural Beauty for Parkway, Baltimore, Come from Across the Sea



FROM across seas came the idea of the architectural beauty of the latest addition to Baltimore's picture playhouses—the Parkway theatre.

About three years ago an associate of H. W. Webb, president of the Parkway Theatre Company, was visiting England. In the course of his rambles about London, he attended a performance at the celebrated West End Cinema theatre, in Piccadilly Circus.

So impressed was he with the architecture of the place that he went to some trouble to secure plans and photographs of the structure, which he immediately forwarded to Mr. Webb. When Mr. Webb received these plans and photographs, he, too, was so much impressed that he set about the organization of a company to erect a similar theatre in the Southern metropolis—a theatre that would produce the best films and cater to the best element in its community.

The location of the Parkway—it is on North avenue, a door or so from Charles street—can be compared to, say Forty-second street and Broadway, New York. North avenue, the principal crosstown thoroughfare in the upper part of the city, was until recent years a quiet, conservative residential section. But the march of progress after the great fire of 1904 decreed that business should not stop at ancient boundaries—and so North avenue, particularly in the neighborhood of Charles street (the thoroughfare that divides the city into east and west) has rapidly become an uptown business center.

Within walking distance of the most exclusive residential sections, the Parkway has drawn for its clientele upon the cream of Baltimore's population. Its promoters intended that it should be a high-class theatre—as far removed from the ordinary conception of a "movie house" as the legitimate stage is far removed from the side-show of the medicine faker. Starting with the physical appearance of the theatre itself, no stone has been left unturned to maintain this air of dignity and exclusiveness. That is why, night after night, there can be seen among the audiences there men who are leaders in the city's industrial activities. These men, induced to go to the theatre for the first time by their enthusiastic wives, did so in much the spirit that a boy consents to having his face washed. They expected to spend a very bored hour or so watching the "fillums." They go now without any solicitation—for the management of the playhouse caters to the intellect of its patrons as well as to their emotions and risibilities by showing only the best pictures that filmdom produces.

A distinctive feature of this picture playhouse, both from an interior and exterior point of view, is its chasteness of design. There is nothing garish; nothing to smite the senses with a feeling of the bizarre. Everything is in good taste, down to the littlest detail. The front of the house is after the Italian Renaissance design. It is in simple, dignified light gray terra cotta, with an admixture of light and dark texture brick, the whole giving a charming effect.

At first, as with nearly all motion picture houses, there was fear on the part of the residents of the section in which the Parkway theatre was a pioneer that the street was about to be invaded by a cheap "movie house" that would attract an undesirable element and send property values down. But as the walls rose and folks began to get an idea of what the place was going to look like, this fear vanished. Today the very people who looked askance at all film productions are among the most ardent supporters of "the theatre supreme and distinctive," as the slogan of the owners has it.

So much for external appearances. Inside, the theatre might be called egg-shaped, after the lines of its London contemporary, a plan which works out practically in that it presents the screen without distortion to the occupant of every seat in the house, no matter where located. The playhouse proper is reached through a handsome marble lobby, with marble stairs leading from either side to a large lounge and tea room. The lobby as well as the rest of the interior is designed after the fashion of Louis XIV period. Hanging lamps, reproductions of chandeliers at Versailles and Fontainbleu, add to the charm of the tasteful decorations. The tea room is finished in a delicate French gray, with beautiful old rose hangings, much after the style of the cozy salle or lounge of the aristocratic theatres of Paris, Vienna and London.

On each side of the interior there is a commodious "royal box," for use on occasions of ceremony or for special parties. Below are a dozen roomy loges, from which the stage can be seen to excellent advantage. Besides these loges, the first floor contains 800 large, deep-cushioned chairs, upholstered in the prevailing old rose tint with a velour finish, making the seating capacity of the house 1,100 persons.

A $15,000 organ and a large orchestra supply the necessary entertainment for the ear while the eye is engrossed by the scenes projected from an invisible operating room to a screen or radium gold fiber, which brightens the picture and increases its "depth."

One of the most elaborate features of the interior embellishments is the main ceiling, from the large, ornamental dome of which is suspended a strikingly ornamental sunburst. All of the lighting is indirect; there is no glare—in fact, the theatre does not seem to be artificially lighted at all, so equally and unobtrusively are the rays distributed.

Of course the matter of ventilation has been taken care of with the skill and thoroughness that marks the other details. So "fresh" is the air at all times in every part of the theatre that potted flowers and plants are kept growing around the orchestra pit, on the stage and at other points.

One of the most successful of the Parkway's innovations is the weekly showing for children, on Saturday mornings. The critics said it couldn't be done; that the idea of a special performance for children only was impractical and would prove unprofitable.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

All Plans for Washington's Newest Theatre Now Complete and Site Selected

HARRY M. CRANDALL, who already has the theatre which bears his name at Ninth and E streets, Northwest; the Savoy theatre, on Fourteenth street, near Park road, Northwest; the Avenue Grand theatre, on Pennsylvania avenue, near Eighth street, Southeast, and the Apollo, on H street, near Sixth street, Northeast, is reported in another deal which represents an expenditure of approximately $210,000, and which contemplates the erection of a theatre at the corner of Eighteenth street and Columbia road, Northwest, to be unlike anything heretofore contemplated in Washington.

The Knickerbocker Amusement Company, of which Mr. Crandall, Barry Bulkley, Fred S. Swindell and George T. Smallwood are the principal members, have very recently acquired a tract of land having an area of 16,277 feet, with a frontage on Columbia road of 140 feet and of 173 feet on Eighteenth street, for a consideration said to have been in the neighborhood of $60,000, and the deed conveying the property to its new owners has just been filed.

The new motion picture theatre is to have a seating capacity of about eighteen hundred. In addition to this there will be a concert, symphony and lecture hall, luxurious parlors and lounges, and Mr. Crandall has announced that it is his intention to endeavor to secure the many important events which come to Washington in the way of symphony concerts, vocal and instrumental concerts, travelogues and other similar entertainments, holding that the use of a motion picture theatre along these lines is the logical development of the trend of amusement in Washington. There will be tea rooms, lounges, promenades, with attendants furnished by the management, for dances, receptions and teas in the afternoon.

The erection of this building, according to the plans prepared by Reginald Wyckliffe Geare, architect, will acquire the expenditure of at least $150,000. It is to be strictly fireproof and constructed of concrete, iron and steel, with a front of stone-trimmed brick. The present plans call for a four-story structure to be equipped with all the most modern improvements in the way of seating, ventilating and lighting. The seats are to be of a new type, more roomy and comfortable than any now in use in Washington. The lighting of the auditorium is to be by a new system of the self-direct, self-diffusing type, that will permit of the giving of any desired light effect in an instant, varying grom a full sunlight effect of subdued moonlight, and the fixtures have been specially designed for the Knickerbocker.

The main foyer will cover practically the entire Eighteenth street frontage, the remainder being given over to a store. The entrance to this latter is at the corner. It is contemplated having the lobbies and foyers of sufficient size to accommodate the entire seating capacity of the theatre. A marquise will be built over the main entrance. Exists will be provided on both streets.

The theatre will cover the entire plot of ground, which is in the shape of an elongated triangle. The auditorium is to be built to conform thereto, and it is said that this is highly desirable, for with the stage at the apex of the triangle, the screen will be in full view of all seats. There will be a balcony, across the front of which will be a series of mezzanine boxes, having a long-vaulted ceiling. At the end of the gallery will be a large circular room provided with a great fireplace. There will be loggias in the long gallery promenade overhanging the auditorium and this will give space for other boxes.

A retiring room for lady patrons is to be provided at the rear of the auditorium and opposite this will be the men's smoking room. Directly above, with approaches also from the auditorium, will be a Japanese tea room and lounge. All of the fixtures, hangings and other furnishings have been specially designed for use in the Knickerbocker, and are of the Adam-period type, the color scheme being ivory, gold and old rose. The ladies' retiring and rest room is to be in blue and gold, while the balcony promenade is to be in lavender and ivory, with the upholstery and hangings in lavender velour.

An orchestra of fifteen pieces is to furnish music during the two shows to be given each evening, with a fifteen-minute concert preceding each show. Other musical features planned for the theatre include symphony concerts and musicales, such as it has hereteofore been impossible to produce in any but the larger downtown theatres. It is proposed to exhibit the big special, as well as the regular feature films of the best producers.

Ground for the new theatre was broken during the second week of October and it is expected that fully six months will be required in the building operations alone. Great care is to be given to every detail. The ornamentation of the house is to be accomplished by experts in the various lines and everything possible is to be done to keep it in harmony with the tone of the neighborhood in which it is to be located—one of the most fashionable of the city and in itself a city, for there are nearly two score large apartment houses in the immediate vicinity from which the company count upon drawing their patronage.

It is expected that the Knickerbocker will prove popular from the start. Washington, the Nation's capital, is singularly without a place of this type. Motion pictures have lately become the amusement of the rich as well as of the poor, so that the Knickerbocker, located as it will be, will secure the patronage of the better class people. It will draw to it also the many big concert events, for here again the location, as well as the seating capacity, will count in its favor.

Clinton Square Theatre, Newark, N. J.

Motion Picture Pianist

what's the name of that piece they're playing?" and the person so addressed usually is equally as ignorant on the subject. This recalls to my mind a rather amusing incident (possibly not new to the reader) where the old Irish lady was instructed by her physician to give her husband his medicine in a "recumbent posture." The story runs that, being puzzled, she consulted Mrs. Murphy, her neighbor, asking whether she had a "recumbent posture" in the house, whereupon Mrs. Murphy coolly and conscientiously replied that she "did have one laying around the house somewhere, but mislaid it."

It is therefore no wonder that the public have learned to be indifferent toward the musicians, because the latter keep themselves as strangers toward the audience. Only the other evening I dropped into one of the New York show houses in the Nineties. The orchestra played reminiscences of old Scotch airs, but even the grand finale (which so winsomely begged for applause) preceded by good musical efforts, failed to get a single "hand" (as it is professionally termed). And why? For no other reason than cited above. If the pianist or musician in general would co-operate with the audience, he would find his work more gratifying and a marked improvement would follow in all directions.

The orchestra can educate the audience in almost any direction it may have in mind, both as to good and bad music (deliver us from the latter, for there is enough and more than enough in circulation at the present time) just as it is enabled to enlighten the patrons as to what is being rendered.

Co-operation is very perceptible on the stage. When the dainty little soubrette sings to the bald-headed fat man in the box she is catering to the audience (even at the expense of this victim); she wins many laughs and it is when this harmless amusing incident in her act occurs that the spectators begin to sit up and take notice. There is the refined, beautifully-gowned contralto, who is featuring a song, and throws roses (of course, purchased by the publishing house which printed or produced the song) to various patrons, in order to win their favor and make the intended impression, originated by the song producers in question. Candy or other souvenirs are often distributed, with similar motives. At any rate, it creates special attention. Give the audience something for nothing (usually worth nothing!) and the recipient will be moved to take immediate notice and in turn fall for the motive of the donator. After this comes the manager's scheme of offering souvenirs or prize-drawings to induce patronage. Last but not least comes the pianist or the orchestra; in fact, any one who has charge of the musical end of the game, to give the patrons something in the way of co-operation. Give them the privilege of getting what they want in music, but by all means see to it that what they want is GOOD MUSIC. This should be easy to demonstrate.

If you are a pianist and also a leader, it is a very important matter to select good musicians, whether Union or otherwise. Special attention should be given to the violinist, particularly the first fiddle. Is there anything more exasperating than a scratchy, squeaky violin, a player who does not produce one "clean" note? To say nothing of the noise produced upon a five-dollar "Stradivarius" found in Cohen's, around the corner, the value claimed for the same, depending largely upon the imagination of the proprietor of the inevitable three-ball establishment. There are a great many "fiddlers" from Punkinville's "Orchestra" who could produce as good and better music than some of the violinists that I have had the pain of hearing in the picture-vaudeville house; even a poor clarinet sounds better than a squeaky violin, which seems to have only an E string in each position. Enter a theatre with a toothache and have it accompanied by this kind of music and you will not care whether you live or die (I have had this very experience). Music emitted from the common harmonica, as played by the East Side beau-brummel, is far more enchanting than the unmerciful notes coming from a cheap violin, played by an amateur without a musical soul. We can overlook a poor pianist, but we cannot tolerate a wicked "fiddler." Selecting a cornetist is also important, as some cornetists are better adapted for out-door work or in a very large dance hall, where the Tango is performed almost exclusively to the strains of the cornet (which marks the rhythm, melody and tempo). Put a player like this into a small theatre and the latter will be mistaken for a dance hall at a considerable distance from the site. Of course a good cornetist should be able to regulate his notes just as any other musician can do, but from what I have heard, the cornet, or the man, is frequently not adapted to the place. My uncle was the proud possessor of both a Besson Cornet and a fine musical reputation, still I never received sufficient enlightenment on the subject to enable me to criticize. But to get back to the point, take precise care in selecting musicians for the photoplay house, as this is a type of theatre that has become very prominent in recent time.

Wants Instruction for Organ Playing

Question: Will you kindly advise me where I can get instruction for playing the pipe organ for moving pictures?

Answer: "The Complete Method for Modern Organ Playing," by H. E. Parkhurst, contains a thorough course of systematic training in the manual and pedal technique of the organ in a series of specialized studies partly composed for this work and partly selected from the best organ literature extant. This method is obtainable wherever music is sold.

Kline Poster Reports Success

THE Kline Poster Company, Inc., Philadelphia, reports that they are having great success with the colored portraits of the leading film stars which they publish on post cards, wall hangers and program covers. Jobbers have been secured in different sections of the country, and they are doing big business.

These portraits are made up in seven colored offset lithography, and are used by exhibitors in many different ways. The post cards size has a post card back for mailing purposes, announcing the appearance of the star in such a production on such a date.

Don't make the mistake of running your projector too long; every manufacturer makes at least one important change in his mechanism each year, and these changes are made not for the benefit of the manufacturer but for the benefit of the exhibitor. The manufacturer realizes that the exhibitor must be kept in a state of satisfaction and that is why they are experimenting from one year's end to another, and spending thousands of dollars on these experiments, yet keeping the cost of the finished product so low that it is shortsightedness on the part of an exhibitor to run a machine for a longer period than three years; two would be better.

Finally—The Operator. In these days of prosperity, we read in the daily papers where employees of certain large factories have had their salaries increased by their employers, who realize that it is impossible for their workmen to exist on the present scale of wages owing to the "high cost of living," but we have failed to see any announcement made where the operator had been benefited by any such raise. Is it because the exhibitor feels that the operator is something less than human, or is it just thoughtlessness or what?

The operator is the hardest worked and poorest paid, with few exceptions, of any one identified with the motion picture industry, and yet he plugs along trying to improve his work and while seemingly satisfied says to himself: "Gee, and they tell you if you do good work the boss will be sure to notice it"—but they don't, at least, so far as any increase in salary is concerned.

You feature your theatre, your picture, your music, Mr. Manager, why not feature your operator for a change? Give it a trial. You can't lose.

I. G. Sherman.

But shortly after the theatre was opened, the plan was tried out. Only carefully selected programs of travel, educational and comedy films, such as "Fanchon the Cricket," "Cinderella," "Making United States Money," "Making Stamps," and pictures of bird and animal life, were presented. With the suddenness that was surprising, the idea took hold in the community, and mothers began sending their children to the performances in much the spirit that they sent them to school or to the music teacher's. The only problem that the management faces today in connection with these Saturday "matinees" is the problem of finding accommodations for the patrons of them.

The pictures presented at the Parkway are booked on the open booking plan. Every film must be seen and approved by the management before it goes before the eyes of the patrons. Nothing in the least suggestive, nothing in the least below the high standard set on the opening day and rigidly adhered to ever since, is even considered for a showing. The programs are run on schedule, and this schedule is advertised so that one may time one's arrival at the theatre to accord with the showing of the particular film or films which one desires to see. A weekly program heralding coming attractions is mailed to 5,000 selected names. If one wants information as to price of seats, time of performances and so on, there is a special telephone information department to answer such inquiries promptly and courteously. Automobiles of patrons are checked and guarded by a special officer. Ushers and attendants are well trained and, above all, polite. Prices range from 10 cents to 50 cents. All screen announcements are made in trick film. The theatre's own cameraman is ever alert for local happenings of interest, and within 24 hours after they have occurred big news events of local interest are shown in the screen's Topical Review.

These are some of the reasons for the Parkway's success. Under the active management of Bernard Depkin, Jr.—a very live young man with very progressive ideas and the stability to put them into execution—the patronage is growing steadily. Young Depkin believes that there is something more to a motion picture playhouse than a projecting machine, a screen and tawdry color effects in decoration. To the men who made the Parkway possible the proper presentation of film productions is as aesthetic an undertaking as is the production of the most expensive offering of the so-called legitimate stage. And that the public agrees with this professional point of view is evidenced by the steady clip-clip of the ticket machine in the box office out front at every performance. That, after all, is the surest criterion of success.

Brewster's Printing Methods

In printing natural color positives from this colored negative an optical printer may be used similar in design to that shown at C, Fig. 17. Brewster has devised and patented several forms of optical printers but the one shown at C, Fig. 17, will serve the purposes of our description.

In C, Fig. 17, N is the colored negative film at the exposing aperture. P is the positive stock, double coated and color sensitized exactly as is the unexposed negative stock.

Traveling in the directions indicated by arrows the illuminated image of the color negative N is cast by the lens L upon the light splitting prism R. S. The light ray is reflected by the prism R on to the surface of the mirror M-1 and from thence passes through the color filter F-1 to one surface of the double coated positive film P. Simultaneously the light beam from the negative N passes straight through the glass block S, is reflected from the mirror M-2 and passing through the color filter F-2 makes an exposure on the other side of the double coated positive film P. The filters F-1 and F-2 absorb respectively orange-red and blue-green, and thus on one side of the color sensitive positive stock an image corresponding to the red and orange in the original subject is secured, while on the other side of the double coated positive an image is recorded reproducing the blues and greens of the subject photographed.

By bleaching and basic dyeing (after development and fixing) the blue-green sensation images are stained blue-green, while the red-orange sensation images are dyed red-orange—the highlights after clearing being transparent. Upon projection an approximately natural colored reproduction of the objects photographed results, with the added virtue of exact superimposition of the red and green sensation images on the opposite sides of the film. The films prepared by Brewster in a manner similar to the description may be projected at normal speed on ordinary projectors, and the process is interesting, as being somewhat different from direct additive synthesis (superimposing colored lights) or subtractive color mixing (superimposing dyed or toned images) which form the basis of all previously described processes.

In the course of our article we have by no means described all of the methods by which it is proposed to produce natural color motion pictures; there are shoals of patents and scores of "half baked" inventors who claim to be able to produce the desired results.

But our article must end somewhere and in bringing it to a close we can at least claim that films showing approximately Nature's hues have been made and exhibited by all the process which we have outlined. In addition several more processes are being rapidly perfected and radical improvements have been achieved in some existing processes. These results will be detailed for Camera Department readers in the near future, along with other articles treating the technical problems of Color Cinematography, and we believe that all workers in this field will concede that the Camera Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is the first to give full recognition to the art of making cinematographic pictures in the colors of Nature.

Employees Get Salary Increase

THE C. P. Goerz American Optical Company has just announced to their office and factory staff a general increase in salaries and wages to take effect about December 15.

The reason given is the ever increasing cost of living, which the management feels should be compensated for, as far as the rather adverse conditions under which the Goerz Company has to work on account of the war abroad will allow, by a suitable increase in the earnings of their loyal employees. The proposed increase will add more than ten per cent. to the present payroll of the company.

Raise Age Requirement of Operators

AN order in Council has been passed in Toronto raising the age of qualified moving-picture operators in the province from eighteen to twenty-one and whereas no age was before specified for assistants, that will be eighteen in the future. It is not regarded as likely that operators who were hitherto considered qualified and have not reached the age of twenty-one will be affected but that the change will only apply in future cases.

Business is booming as never before

Theaters are crowded. Exhibitors are hustling. Now is the time to install a complete N. C. R. Ticket-Printing Register to help you to make money

This register will print your tickets as they are called for at the window.

It will record them as they are printed, and issue them direct to patrons at the rate of over 100 per minute.

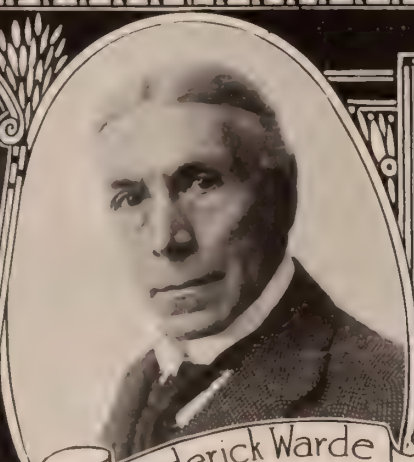
It will enable you to do away with costly preprinted tickets (another saving to you), and will give you absolute control over your box office receipts, whether present or away.

If the National Ticket-Printing Register did no more than this, it would make you money.

But it can be ordered to print either plain or stub tickets, and from one to five at a time.

It can be ordered to print tickets of two colors, and number them consecutively.

Business is booming more than ever. Now is the time to make money.



If you are not using an N. C. R. Ticket-Printing Register, it will pay you to see our nearest agent, or write direct to

THE selection of the Vitagraph service as the basis of the Rialto program, after Mr. Rothapfel had carefully analyzed and compared the scripts, casts and direction of Greater Vitagraph's product for the ensuing year, with that of the entire photoplay market, marks the supreme recognition of the super-quality of Vitagraph productions. This recognition, coming from the director of the world's most magnificent home of entertainment, may well serve as a gauge to exhibitors the country over, of the immense box-office value of Vitagraph's offerings.

Newspapers of Country Pile Up Praise for "AN ENEMY TO THE KING"

Featuring
The Foremost Actor of the Modern Stage

The New York Times.

"An Enemy to the King" is one of the finest pictures ever seen here. It is, in fact, a screen classic, and however long it may be preserved, it will always bear graphic testimony of Mr. Sothern's skill as a romantic actor. The success of the picture depends, likewise, on Edith Storey's contribution to it and on that of the other principals, as well as on the care taken in reproducing the atmosphere of sixteenth century France.

Thousands of movie fans who have never had the good fortune of seeing Mr. Sothern in one of his famous roles will understand from this film why his fame is great and enduring.

E. H. SOTHERN

and that Splendid Actress

EDITH STOREY

"Go as fast as you can to see 'An Enemy to the King.' You can't go wrong, for it's a masterpiece."—"Zit."—New York Evening Journal.

UNPRECEDENTED have been the expressions of approval of both the trade and public press for this photoplay classic.

After reviewing the production in the space of nearly a column, following its premier at The Rialto, New York, "The Times," one of New York's most conservative and representative newspapers, reverted to the feature in a special Sunday article, an extract from which is reproduced herewith, after the picture's run at The Rialto had been completed. In its enthusiastic comment regarding it, "The Times" voices the sentiment of reviewers everywhere.

Mae Tinee, in "The Chicago Daily Tribune," declared:

"It is pleasant to be able to chronicle that in 'An Enemy to the King' those to whom E. H. Sothern has been a magnet in the past will find themselves as surely drawn to him.

"He appears no less suave and polished than in the days of yore, when from before the footlights there floated to him the incense born of the sighs and smiles and rapid heart beats of romantic matinee girls."

Acclaim, so unanimous and so significant in its box office possibilities, can scarcely be ignored by any exhibitor.

in The Saturday Evening Post

"My first impression after viewing 'The Breaker' was of astonishment that five reels of film had been unfolded in regulation time without my being conscious of that period. The great interest created by the filmed story had left my mind immune to time. I am confident the appeal of the story will be wide." James S. McQuade, in the Moving Picture World.

"'The Breaker,' unlike many other thrilling stories, keeps intact its thrills after they have been put in motion picture form. Arthur Stringer's tale of counterfeiters, if anything, has more 'pep' in celluloid print." Louella O. Parsons, in the Chicago Herald.

"THE COUNTRY THAT GOD FORGOT"

Exhibitors presenting this Selig Red Seal Play de luxe everywhere report the S. R. O. sign. Exchanges report that the re-bookings of this drama have broken all previous records.

"THE COUNTRY THAT GOD FORGOT"

Presents an all-star cast in the support of Thomas Santschi, George Fawcett and Mary Charleson. A gripping story of a woman's fall and of her redemption. Of how an avenging Nemesis came to the man from Out Yonder!

"THE COUNTRY THAT GOD FORGOT"

Has been universally praised by film reviewers who have remarked upon the wonderful acting, the unusual story, and the numerous little touches which, in the aggregate, make or mar a production.

THE LAST SENTENCE

(An Edison Five-Reel Production for Release JANUARY 1ST)

Co-starring

MARK MAC DERMOTT and MIRIAM NESBITT

A SIMPLE GIRL OF BRITTANY COULD NOT BECOME A LADY OF REFINEMENT AND EDUCATION so the man who married her, fascinated by her youth and grace and beauty, went away and left her after making her happy for a few short months. That is the beginning of this wonderfully realistic story of life.

It commences in idyllic old Brittany when George Crosby, a New York lawyer, meets Renee Kerouac, a simple and charming, but uneducated and uncultured, girl of the people. It commences with a tender romance that is exquisite in conception and that is made most beautiful through the delicate manner in which it has been treated.

Then the illusions that romantic love engender fade slowly away and the story shifts to New York, where the Man lives, while the picture of the Girl in Brittany slips out of his memory.

Then a stern tragedy comes into the lives of the two who had loved so well but so unwisely, and the threads of the story are picked up by the second generation who carry them to the end.

A story that will delight the mind—a production that will delight the eye

"A MESSAGE TO GARCIA," an Edison production of a story evolved directly from the incidents narrated in the immortal preachment of Elbert Hubbard. This superb five-reel masterpiece was filmed in Cuba by a company sent there expressly for this purpose.

"THE COSSACK WHIP." This is conceded to be one of the finest five-reel productions of 1916. The story was written especially for the screen by James Oppenheim, the noted novelist. It has all the force and appeal of a literary masterpiece and it has won the unstinted admiration of critics, exhibitors and patrons.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

DECEMBER 23, 1916

"The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" Is New Mutual Serial

NEWSPAPER life is the background for the newest Mutual serial. "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" is its title. The serial consists of 15 stories each complete in itself. Each story deals with a powerful incident in real newspaper life. Each tells the story from the "inside"—depicting in detail the way in which front page news is collected. Many of the stories are founded on real facts. They show girl reporters exposing the evils of the underworld—securing confessions from crooks—interviewing society debutantes—aiding the government in capturing counterfeiters and blackmailers—ferreting out strange crimes—foiling evil plots.

Newspaper Life From the "Inside."

It is hard to conceive anything more fascinating than newspaper life. The whole world lies before the eyes of the star reporter. He delves into all that is queer and unusual. He mingles with the biggest men of the land and the most unscrupulous. Bankers and crooks, presidents and politicians, clergymen and murderers are all "copy" to him. Make the reporter a girl and you double the interest in the situations. Tell the stories from the "inside" and you again increase its fascination. Nothing to compare with this series of newspaper tales has ever before been revealed on the screen.

Each Story Complete.

Each chapter of this fascinating new serial is complete in itself. Each tells the story of a bit of "front-page news" that is more interesting than the news itself. New and unusual thrills will be found in each chapter. "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" was produced by Niagara Film Studios. The pictures were directed by George Terwilliger. They feature such stars as Earl Metcalfe, Helen Green and Zena Keefe. Each chapter is two reels in length. The first is released December 28. Bookings on this new serial can now be made at any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges.

Gaumont's mystery-detective series, "The Vampires," has broken box-office records in many theaters. Its exposure of life in the underworld of Paris is unusually vivid. The surprising twists and turns in its plot keep audiences constantly on edge, and with curiosity whetted for the next episode in the series. Interested exhibitors can obtain bookings on applying to their nearest Mutual exchange.

Powell Studios Are Greatly Enlarged

The studios of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation are being greatly enlarged. In these new and enlarged studios will be made the Nance O'Neil and Marjorie Rambeau Mutual Star Productions, mentioned in these columns the last few weeks. The augmented studios will have a total floor space of 16,000 square feet and be equipped with every modern device that will tend for better pictures. Miss Rambeau's first appearance will be made in "The Greater Woman." This is an adaptation of Algernon Boyeson's famous play of the same name which has been a tremendous success in Europe. Nance O'Neil will make her Mutual debut in "Mrs. Balfame." This play is a dramatization of the celebrated novel by Gertrude Atherton. Thousands have read the novel and are sure to look forward with interest to the picturization of the story. President Freuler paid Mrs. Atherton a tremendous sum for the exclusive right to film this successful book. In so doing he is carrying out his avowed intention of securing the works of the very best authors for film purposes. Bookings on both the Rambeau and O'Neil pictures can now be made at any of the Mutual Exchanges. The exact dates of the first releases featuring these talented stars will be announced shortly.

Chaplin in "The Rink"

Chaplin grows more versatile with each new release. You have seen him in all sorts of situations. But this is his first opportunity to demonstrate his ability as a roller skater. He surely makes the most of it. The very thought of seeing Chaplin on roller skates will bring thousands to the theaters showing "The Rink."

William Russell Is At His Very Best In "The Twinkler"

"THE TWINKLER," a five reel William Russell Mutual Star Production, is scheduled for release the week of December 18. This production was made at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, Cal. It is a powerful human interest tale of the underworld. It was written by a convict in Sing Sing penitentiary. It is based on real facts. It gives William Russell a chance to do some of the best acting of his entire career.

Powerful Situations.

Powerful situations abound throughout the picture. Surprises follow one another thick and fast. "The Twinkler" is a light-fingered thief—a "dip"—in police parlance. His "best girl" is sentenced to be electrocuted. "The Twinkler" seeks a pardon for her. The governor's own secretary sets out for the prison with her pardon. On the train the secretary accidentally displays his wallet. The temptation is too strong for "the Twinkler" to resist. He nips the wallet. After hopping off the train he finds within the wallet his sweetheart's pardon. His robbery has sent his loved one to the chair.

Big Human Interest Appeal.

Theater audiences the country over are sure to be held spellbound by the human interest appeal of the tale. The ending of the story is particularly unique. The biggest surprise of all is reserved for the last. Popular though William Russell is today, "The Twinkler" will make him more so. Bookings on all of the Russell pictures can be obtained at any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges.

"Diamond" Sequel Plays to Capacity Business

Reports so far received on the business done by the sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky" prove that it is even a greater box-office magnet than was predicted. Turnaway business has been done at practically every theater showing it. In some places the crowds were so great that it was with difficulty that pedestrians could make their way past the theaters. In several cases re-bookings have already been arranged, so great a drawing card did it prove.

In the latest chapter of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," Helen Holmes performs no less than four separate "stunts" in this single episode. Exhibitors are declaring this chapter play a real housepacker.

INTERNATIONAL

Patria to Have Greatest Advertising and Publicity Campaign Ever Launched

WITH the definite conclusion to release Patria on January 1st, the International announces the most stupendous advertising and publicity campaign ever launched in connection with a motion picture serial. Patria has already been enormously advertised. The real campaign is now starting.

Patria will be advertised in the newspaper with the largest circulation in 30 of the largest cities in the United States. Full page, half page and quarter pages will be used.

Because of the popularity of Mrs. Vernon Castle, the star, and of Louis Joseph Vance, the author of Patria, newspapers are clamoring for the privilege of publishing the story in serial form. So far arrangements have been made with 25 of the leading ones to that end.

On the Sunday preceding the release of Patria three full pages will be used in each of the Hearst Sunday newspapers, whose combined circulation is more than 2,000,000.

Before the campaign closes, Patria announcements will appear in Cosmopolitan, the magazine with the largest circulation in the world, Hearst's Magazine, Harper's Bazar, Good Housekeeping, Motor and Motor Boating.

Supplementing all of this, more than 200 small newspapers throughout the country will carry the message of Patria.

Before the campaign closes, practically every city, town and hamlet in the United States will have been reached.

International knows Patria is the greatest serial ever produced. It is backing this knowledge with the greatest advertising campaign ever known.

A fortune in box office receipts awaits the exhibitors who book Patria. Films are now in International exchanges, together with a remarkable assortment of paper and exhibitor's helps.

AN EDITORIAL FOR YOU FROM THE N.Y. TELEGRAPH

A serious situation in the motion picture business seems to have arisen in the growing scarcity of short-length films. Producers who have in mind only the exploitation of stars and the possibilities of metropolitan productions, are by way of forgetting the many thousands of small town houses which cannot afford by reason of small seating capacity and limited attendanee - to pay for great features, great names and celebrated productions. The same is true of many of the small neighborhood picture theatres where small prices accompany a general desire for variety.

On the regular stage, the stars of the drama are seldom within the reach of the small houses or the patrons of vaudeville. These facts make plain the need and the commendability of the short film for the 5,000 to 7,000 lesser picture houses which cannot afford the great features or the star performers.

Where D'ye Get That Stuff?

The Craziest Funniest Picture Ever ... ... Made

The Best Proposition on the Market

STATE RIGHTS

NOW SELLING

They're all trying to hand you something different—but DO they?

Here's the greatest box-office novelty ever released. A proven winner in more than one class of theatre. We've proven that the title gets 'em, that the picture not only PLEASES but HOLDS 'em, and that for clean, satisfying entertainment "WHERE D'YE GET THAT STUFF?" is the goods.

The Featured Star is Popular EDNA AUG Musical Comedy Fun Maker H. C. WITWER & H. H. VAN LOAN Wrote the screamingly funny titles.

You can't beat it. You can't even tie it. Listen.

"WHERE D'YE GET THAT STUFF?" has greater advertising possibilities—a greater chance to go over big with the public than any State Rights Picture you ever saw. You can play this picture like a road show.

That's what one of the biggest State Rights buyers in the country is doing and he's cleaning up. You ought to see the magnificent line of paper now ready—one-sheets to twenty-four-sheets—heralds too, in fact everything all ready for you to get out and get busy lining up the Exhibitors.

IMPORTANT: "WHERE D'YE GET THAT STUFF?" has been advertised only once and territory is going fast. That's what the experienced men in the business think of the picture. If you want an opportunity to learn how good it is you'd better write, wire, phone or call IMMEDIATELY.

TO MY PHOTOPLAY FRIENDS IN AMERICA:

I am on the job with Essanay at last. I'm here to stay. Count up my forty-six trunks and you will see I am prepared for some time.

Some people say you can't come back. I have exploded that theory for I am back after two years in the French army corps.

I have a new line of comedies which I believe better than any I have produced. I am jumping right into this work now and will be ready to announce my first release shortly.

I have been reported dead. I was wounded, but I am now feeling very much alive. I object to sitting at my own autopsy as long as I have laughs left in me. If I ever cease to make the public laugh, I will be willing to consider myself a dead one. But not till then.

I will be with you personally, on the screen, soon.

REFORM FILM RENTAL SYSTEM

HERE'S some more good sense, driven home with a series of jolts.

An exhibitor—the same man who said things last week—says that the present film rental system is the root of to-day's motion picture evil.

Exhibitors won't be prosperous—and therefore the industry won't prosper—until the present system of rental is revolutionized and rebuilt upon a basis of equity, economy and profit to all.

Stop talking Censorship, he says. The abolition of Censorship is the manufacturer's own duty and privilege—no other man's.

Present method of film rental absolutely wrong.
Revolution must follow.
The marketer of film a rank failure.
Contracts are worthless.
Rental prices all wrong.
Exhibitors' organization essential to reform.
To the manufacturers: Censor yourselves!
Let the war-cry be "Reform on Film Service."
To exhibitors: Organize—from the ground up.
The starting point of organization is the exhibitor's pocket-book.

OF prime importance—of complete importance—to the exhibitor is the big economic wrong or wrongs which are robbing his box office, and taking his business legs from under him.

This exhibitor says that a faulty rental system is the big economic wrong.

Is he right? What do you say?

New York, December 7.

Editor MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City

My Dear Sir:

WHEN I wrote my letter of November 15th, published by you this week, I had very little intention of sending in a second one on film service, as I felt the question could and would be covered by others in your columns. I am going to accept your very kind invitation, however, and send it in herewith, not waiting for the others to cover it.

I LOOK upon the present method of film rental as absolutely and entirely wrong. It lacks every element of equity and fairness, not saying a word about the most important item of all, namely, profit.

We all know it is wrong; the great question is how to remedy it. The industry is so vast, it covers such a wide field and has so many angles that it staggers an ordinary mind to try and show a way to do any new thing in it and do it right. Your Wall Street man was right when he said it needed a big calibre man. The article replying to same the week after told some truths about what a big calibre man should do, but it was only a faint expression of what his task must necessarily be.

TO my mind the film service end is the big problem of the business and the satisfactory settlement of it is going to be a gigantic task and involve revolutionary changes in the present system.

I am going to speak not only from personal experience, but from the experiences of many other exhibitors with whom I have gone over these matters many times.

First and foremost, the showing of features for one day only is a mistake. Why is it not changed?

WELL, the exchange gives us a price per day, and if we want it for two days they want twice as much. Then why should we take a chance and run it a second day when we can get a new feature for the same price?

ON the other hand, anyone in the theatrical business knows that Monday night is usually so poor that the passes are let in on that night. Tuesday is better, and each night improves until Saturday is capacity; I am now referring to New York attractions running at Broadway houses to profitable long runs. On the road in large cities where they run a week Monday is the test night; people wait to hear what the show is and what the papers have to say about it. If notices are favorable, business jumps up every night thereafter.

The picture theatre shows a film; it makes good and goes on its merry little way, not one bit helped by its having made good. The picture manager may say, "But I have the same people every night."

HE does not. Let any one of them take note of the people who come every night during the week and see what percentage of the total attendance per week it would amount to. Then let him run a good film two nights and see whether his second night is not better than the first, and let him also listen to how many say they heard it was a great film from some one who saw it the night before.

BUT I am running ahead of my ticket, because why should the exhibitor pour money out to the exchange and pay double for the two nights; first let the exchange make a concession for the second night's showing.

I KNOW one manager who runs open booking. He makes a practice to select for a second showing in his city, films that are first run at other houses and make a hit. He has found that he gets the film at a big reduction over what the first run man pays for it, and in many cases he takes in more money than the other man did. And when the first run fellow has a lemon, this

VOL. XIV December 23, 1916 No. 25

An Exhibitor's Dream of a League from Which He Would Derive Some Benefit

IF every proprietor and manager of a motion picture theatre in America were a member of an organization which bound exhibitors and their interests as closely together as the Typographical Union, the Liquor Dealers' Association, the Roman Catholic Clergy, the American Bankers' Association—things would happen in and to the motion picture business.

It would be a fine organization for a man to be president of. Or vice-president. Or Treasurer.

BUT they say it can't be done, because motion picture exhibitors are always competitors of one another. They are all after the same money, and the fastest one gets the most of it. And the more he gets of it—the more he gets of it. And the less the others are bound to get.

But are they, the "say-ers," right? There is a city in Pennsylvania which does a lot of photoplay exhibition. Eighty per cent. of the theaters are conducted along lines drawn in one man's office. That man only owns five or six per cent. of the houses involved. He has come to control the others through his able conduct of a film booking office and his known willingness to take charge of any man's theatre and make it a paying proposition. They have brought their theatres to him, and he has made them pay. The other twenty per cent. of this city's picture theatres are never prosperous. They never will be strikingly successful, run independently as they are now.

WHY don't they go to this man as the others have done? Who knows? Why don't exhibitors in this country belong to the Exhibitors' League? If they did, they would still compete and try for the maximum profits just as they do now. But instead of lessening the flow of change from the public pocket toward the motion picture they would increase it. And possibly there would be enough for all!

And in each city the picture houses would be conducted along the general lines laid out by the local League head and Board of Directors for the best interests of all. And the theatres of each city, while only bound together through organization, would be in principle like the local chains of retail stores with which we are familiar in most cities. All would make money under the same general system and with the same line of goods—in fact, as competitors—which seems unbelievable! But is a fact.

The point is, that under such an organization exhibitors would be competitors—but legitimate competitors, not cut-throat competitors. Helping themselves by helping each other and not concentrating their energy upon killing off the other fellow.

man knows it and avoids that particular feature. It's a good game but, of course, only a temporary scheme.

WE must not overlook the fact that the readjustment may have to come entirely from the real exhibitors' organization which we are all hoping to see soon. Even a big calibre man will need a strong exhibitors' association to help him work out the many problems and co-operate to the desired ends.

LET the war-cry be "Reform on Film Service," and let the censorship rest. The latter matter is for the manufacturer to worry about anyhow. Let him be careful of the kind of pictures he makes and he won't have trouble with censors.

I HAVE always found that the pocketbook is the real pulse to everyone's interest. Touch it and they instantly call for help. So let us talk to the exhibitors from the pocketbook standpoint and that point only for awhile, and note the results. I believe that film service can be readjusted so that everyone will make money, referring to manufacturers as well as exhibitors. Some exhibitors must be weeded out, there are too many in the business. Likewise the manufacturers. But the worthy ones need have no fear and the others are better off in some other line.

In conclusion would say that I truly believe every exhibitor who is in the business to stay will be only too eager to join the right sort of organization, but you must have a starting point.

LABOR unions have traveling delegates to start new lodges and get things going at each point. We must do the same.

LET'S get in touch with the labor people, find out how they start the work going and then start some sort of a campaign whereby the money to carry out the preliminary work will be forthcoming. And in the meantime, get the data from the Railroad leaders and publish same as soon as possible.

WE want strong arm work. We have good men, and men who I know are willing to stay up nights to work for the common cause, only must show them the light. EXHIBITOR

PERHAPS the most important point scored in the above letter is the fact that exhibitor organization—a big business organization of exhibitors—is essential to the reform of the film rental system.

SO it is. We believe that several thousand exhibitors feel the same way about it. And we furthermore believe that several thousand exhibitors would organize very quickly—into a big business organization—if some practical exhibitor like the man who wrote the above letter would tell them the business reasons for organization.

EXHIBITORS are tired of having organization preached at them—quite as tired as we are of preaching it. They know that exhibitor organization thus far has proven to be a pitiful failure—that the M. P. E. L. of America is today without members, influence, leadership, constructive effort—or able to offer an exhibitor member a single box-office help.

EXHIBITORS are not organized—except in some excellent local and state organizations—and they never will organize in a broad, powerful body until an organization movement is started from the ground up. And the ground up means on business—on box-office lines; it means for one thing the elimination of cut-throat competition, which, so long as it exists, will prevent any group of exhibitors, large or small, from sitting in one room together and evolving ways and means to make each other's business a success. WM. A. JOHNSTON.

General Breaks Custom in Booking Policy

Secured "The Battle of the Somme," a British War Film—Action Is Conceded to Mark Important Changes in General Film Methods—Have Option for all British Films Until One Year After Declaration of Peace

THE General Film Company has broken a long established precedent by booking a film from a producer which is not one of its contracted manufacturers. The picture is "The Battle of the Somme," in four reels, released in this country through arrangement with the British Government. It will be sent out through the General Film Company's regular distributing channels and rented to the exhibitors at a price which is in proportion to the usual scale of prices of that company.

"The Battle of the Somme" is said by critics to be the most remarkable war film ever shown in America. It had a two-weeks' record run at the Strand and brought in $2,000 at the Astor one Sunday afternoon and evening. The following Sunday it was shown to large audiences at the Forty-fourth Street theatre and then moved to the Princess, another Shubert house, where it had a successful week's run. Strange to say, "The Battle of the Somme" was offered throughout the country on a state rights plan, but on account of the disappointment which many "fake" war films have caused, no bookings could be secured.

The action of the General Film Company in procuring "The Battle of the Somme" is considered by the film world to be a significant indication of the future plans and movements of that distributing organization. It is known that Benjamin B. Hampton intended to introduce radical ideas in General Film conduct, and this is thought to be the first indication of his reorganization plans as temporary president. The election of a permanent president takes place in January.

First of a Series

"The Battle of the Somme" is the first film of a series which will be released by the British government through General Film. This company has been given an option on all pictures made by the British Government from now until the end of the war and for one year after peace is declared. Many of these pictures already have been produced and are in this country, ready for distribution.

The entire series of films, which will continue to come from abroad until the close of the war, will be released in weekly divisions consisting of two reels of 1,000 feet each. Simultaneous distribution will be made throughout the country by the forty-four exchanges of the General Film Company, 100 prints being shown at the same time. Eventually the pictures, it is hoped, will be shown in every picture theatre in America.

The Patriot Film Corporation, the English organization controlling the films, will devote all its gross profits to the various funds for war relief.

One of the new films deals with the activities of the American ambulance and aeroplane corps and is called "American Boys at the Front." Others show Admiral Jellicoe's fleet in the North Sea, Kitchener's Army, the Urban animated war maps—a series of sixteen maps made from actual maps in the archives of the British war office. Another of these remarkable pictures is "Tanks," showing the armored caterpiller trucks of the British which caused the recent speculation and comment of the press in this country. Probably the most spectacular of these pictures which have yet been received is one which was made by Charles Smith duplicating the destruction of the German Zeppelin, the "L-21." The destruction of the "L-21" occurred at night, so that no motion pictures could be made. Mr. Smith was an eye witness of the Zeppelin wreck and duplicated it in miniature in his London office afterward. His version is said to be so realistic and so accurate that London audiences refused to believe that it was not an actual moving photograph of the Zeppelin's fall.

An Exhaustive Record

The films which are being made by the British Government will be an exhaustive record of this war in all of its phases. Negatives in duplicate and triplicate are being made of the more important subjects, and stored with the care given to valuable documents, in fireproof vaults. After the war is over, these records will be placed together and will show, when completed, the war's devastation and grewsomeness, the home-coming of the Belgians, the regeneration of industry in all countries involved, and the assembling of the monarchs and emissaries when the treaty of peace is signed.

The money which is received by the British Government from the General Film Company will be used for charitable purposes. Mr. Hampton's success in securing these exceptional film subjects for distribution through his company's system is considered by film men to mark a turning point in the career of the General Film Company's affairs.

The British war films, which it will release, will probably be freer from censorship than any pictures that have been received or will be received in this country.

It is known that internal organization plans of considerable importance are being considered by the General Film Company. As soon as these plans are ready they will be announced in detail through the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Rothapfel Goes in for Open Booking at Rialto

"The Witching Hour" Is Selected for the First Week Under the New Policy—Triangle Program Is Removed

EXHIBITORS in all parts of the country will be interested to know that Samuel Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theatre, has booked "The Witching Hour" for the week commencing December 10, a step which followed immediately that of renouncing the Triangle program.

Mr. Rothapfel's advocacy of the program method of distribution has led many to believe that he was one of its greatest champions. The announcement that he intended to change from program to open booking came as a surprise.

No definite reasons are given for this change of policy. It is understood that dissension took place concerning contract renewal with Triangle, and that Mr. Rothapfel then withdrew the Rialto from Triangle service.

The first picture to be shown in the Rialto under the new open booking policy is "The Witching Hour." Mutual's "The Rink," with Charlie Chaplin, will also be shown.

Other plays, selected in the open market, are Clara Kimball Young in "The Foolish Virgin"; Anita Stewart in Robert W. Chambers' play, "The Girl Phillipa"; the Norwegian picture, "Blind Justice," which was produced by Dansk Biograf; Earl Williams in "Arsene Lupin," and Norma Talmadge in "Panthea."

"The Witching Hour," Mr. Rothapfel's first selection under the Rialto's open booking policy is a screen version of Augustus Thomas's play, and was produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation. Mr. Rothapfel said that it was one of the best screen versions of a stage play he has ever seen. Arrangements have been made for a specially prepared musical program to be played in conjunction with "The Witching Hour."

Ochs' Trial Postponed by Request

The committee which is investigating the charges of Fleishman and Goldreyer against Lee A. Ochs, that he has used his office of President of the National League to further his personal ends, went into session again Friday afternoon, December 8.

Due to the absence of Ochs and to the fact that Tobias Keppler, Fleischman and Goldreyer's attorney, did not secure the minutes of the previous meetings, as he had requested, an adjournment was taken.

No definite date was given for the next meeting. It will take place five days following the delivery to Mr. Keppler of the minutes he desires. He will then appear with the necessary witnesses and continue his case against Mr. Ochs.

Buffalo to Oppose Sunday Closing

Buffalo exhibitors are quietly organizing their forces to combat any effort by the authorities to close their houses on Sunday. The managers' association has written a letter, requesting local newspaper proprietors to co-operate with them in the fight, which many believe impending.

Western New York towns are also taking the matter in hand, and it is interesting to note that North Tonawanda's only house has a permanent injunction restraining officials from interfering with its operation on Sunday.

Breitinger Subsides at Last

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 6.

No longer is the signature of J. Louis Breitinger, chairman of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, to be flashed on the screen in advance of every film displayed in a Pennsylvania theatre.

Whether he has tired of this sort of personal advertisement, or whether the attacks that have been made by theatre and exchangemen upon his arbitraty methods of enforcing the unpopular censorship law have influenced him of the wisdom of keeping his name out of the limelight as much as possible in the future, is not explained, but it is officially announced from the censors' headquarters here that in the future the certificate of approval that the law requires shall be shown on the screen in advance of every film will not contain Breitinger's name.

The new form of certificate, the production of which, by the way, eats up many thousands of feet of film each year, at the expense of the manufacturers, is changed in one other important respect. Hereafter it must contain the name of the play for which it was issued. This provision is an additional precaution the board has taken to prevent the substitution of a certificate issued for a film that has been approved, for use with a film that has not passed the censors.

Pittsburghers Put Slides Under Censors

At a meeting of the film men held last week in Pittsburgh it was suggested that the various exchangemen furnish slides to exhibitors calling attention to the eliminations made by the State Board of Censors, or if the cuts are too numerous they can be printed on small cards or circulars and handed to the patrons as they enter the theatre.

By the use of this system they would be able to follow the screen story more closely and at the same time the fallacy of the censorship laws would be better brought home to the people. It is hoped the film men will follow the suggestion and carry out their part of the program if the matter comes to a head.

Rotary Clubs to Help Fight Censorship

At the forthcoming National Convention of the International Association of Rotary Clubs, which is to be held in Atlanta in April, 1917, W. H. Kemble, who has been lately appointed Chairman of the Motion Picture Trade Section of the association will ask the convention for its support in a fight against local censorship as at present in vogue in this country. Mr. Kemble is the president of the Kemble Theatres Corporation of Brooklyn, N. Y., and conducts the Triangle theatre there and also controls the Triangle Exchange.

The Motion Picture Trade Section of the Rotarians comprises fifty-nine theatre managers in as many cities in this country and there are six members who conduct theatres in either Great Britain or Irleand.

Prison Propagandist Photoplay Pleases Pittsburgh Press and Public—First Showing at Pitt Theatre

Special to Motion Picture News.

Pittsburgh, Dec. 5.

WILLIAM FOX'S ten reel prison-problem film, "The Honor System," opened at the Pitt theatre here on December 4. It proved to be the biggest picture brought to the city in many weeks. Society turned out in full force and made the premier showing a notable one. In conjunction with the run of the picture in Pittsburgh, Warden John Francis of the new prison at Rock View, Center County, Pa., is arranging to receive visitors that they may see in what manner the innovations suggested in "The Honor System" are carried out in his prison.

The comments of the daily press follow:

The Pittsburgh Press says:

An expectant crowd last night filled the Pitt theatre for the premiere of William Fox's film story from Henry Christian Warnack's "The Honor System," the novel urging prison reform. Expectations were not borne out by facts, because "The Honor System," despite its ending in a tragic manner, contained more than enough human interest, sustained romantic threads and real-life touches to balance the propaganda side. Last night's was its first showing.

The Pittsburgh Sun:

A graphic portrayal of old prison methods, the whipping post, medieval cells, rotten bread, filth and the lockstep, as contrasted to the newest prison methods of light, health and the control by kindness, is to be seen this week in the Pitt theatre in the spectacular 10-part film drama, "The Honor System," of William Fox. A large crowd attended the first performance last night.

Like all Fox productions, the "movie" is an elaborate dramatization of a big story, tending toward melodrama but carrying a vibrant propaganda in the appeal for greater humanity in the caring for men who have offended society and law and order.

The Chronicle Telegraph says:

That the old-time melodrama has doubled its effectiveness through the medium of motion pictures and still is as great a favorite as ever was shown by the enthusiasm with which William Fox's latest film creation, "The Honor System," was received by an audience that crowded the Pitt theatre to its doors last night.

The thrilling ten-part photoplay, which was shown here for the first time anywhere after leaving the Fox studio, is a protest against the old-fashioned prison regime, but to last night's audience, which was a typical movie gathering, the great strides shown in prison reform were a secondary attraction to the real human emotions and melodramatic scenes. The production combines melodrama, tragedy and comedy all in one with just the right sprinkling of each to appeal to any theatre-goer.. The film, which is taken from Henry Christian Warnack's story, has some wonderful scenic effects.

The Pittsburgh Leader says:

William Fox's production, "The Honor System," a picture depicting the necessity of a reform in the present prison system, blended with an interesting love story, had its premier last night at the Pitt theatre.

The entertainment, which is of three hours' duration, is so full of tense and gripping scenes that the interest of the audience is never given a chance to be distracted. Instead, the interest of the onlookers grows steadily greater as the film unravels.

The Pittsburgh Gazette Times says:

If any disturbed patron of the spoken drama is still searching around for an explanation of the sudden and spectacular use of the "films," they may have the mystery partly explained by a visit to the Pitt theatre. The screen has brought back in much of its glory the old melodrama of fierce emotional conflict and great battles of human love and hate, with its tragedies that swept aside the little trivialities of life and gave us primitive passion and big human wrongs and rights. "The Honor System" has all the qualities and more than the thrilling contents of the old melodramas. To see it is to understand the film fan and also to understand why some of the drawing room, dress suit anemic things we call drama these days is decaying, root and branch. The majority of people want to be stirred by primitive passions, and the films that do these without a voice are beating the spoken drama to the goal of popular favor.

The Pitsburgh Dispatch:

Quite a number of big feature films have been given propaganda of one sort or another. Most of them have failed to hit the bull's-eye of popular approval, at least popular approval of great magnitude, because the drama ingredient was entirely subservient to the propaganda. William Fox, in his production of "The Honor System," which was put on view at the Pitt theatre last evening, wisely made the propaganda subserve the drama. It is all right to teach and moralize, provided you do it in the right way. An absolutely interesting story is told in "The Honor System," and the lesson that it aims to teach—the crying need for prison reform—naturally but not obtrusively follows.

Two Producing Companies Acquire Control of Paramount

Big Distributing Concern Becomes Subsidiary to Combination of Its Units with $22,500,000 Capitalization

ONE of the most important combinations of interests ever effected in the motion picture industry occurred on December 7 when the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which includes among its subsidiaries the Famous Players Film Company, Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures, acquired the controlling interest in the Paramount Pictures Corporation, the distributing medium of the photoplays of those companies.

This gigantic alignment of photoplay interests places under one control the greatest producing and distributing resources ever created in the motion picture industry. The array of stars under the management of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the studios of its various companies in New York City, Los Angeles and Hollywood, and the chain of exchanges controlled by Paramount form, through the consummation of this coalition, what is undoubtedly the greatest single motion picture organization since the advent of the photoplay, and the most comprehensive interlinking of the various units of the business ever undertaken.

Little Change in Officers

The capital stock of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is $12,500,000 and that of Paramount $10,000,000, giving total aggregate resources of $22,500,000. There will be no change of administration in either the parent or the new subsidiary company, Adolph Zukor remaining president of the former and Hiram Abrams continuing as the head of Paramount. The other officers of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president; Arthur S. Friend, Treasurer; Elek J. Ludvigh, secretary; Cecil B. DeMille, director-general; Emil E. Sauer, assistant treasurer, and Ralph A. Kohn, assistant secretary. The Paramount staff, which continues in office, is as follows: Hiram Abrams, president; William L. Sherry, vice-president, and James Steele, treasurer and secretary.

In conformance with the policy that followed the formation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, all the subsidiary companies will preserve their individual identities and will simply be guided in their general policy by the parent company. The tracing of the events which led up to the consummation of this great deal is like recounting the history of the development of the feature play from its very inception.

It was in April, 1912, that the Famous Players Film Company was formed for the express purpose of introducing to the motion picture public the great stage stars who had thus far refused to appear on the screen. Having had great difficulty in obtaining the type of photoplay which he demanded for his own theatres, Adolph Zukor determined that he would go into the producing field himself and make feature photoplays that would conform to his standards as an exhibitor.

Despite the fact that there was scarcely a stage star of any repute who would deign to appear on the screen at that time, Mr. Zukor interested Daniel Frohman in his idea and succeeded in obtaining the consent of Sarah Bernhardt to be the first star to appear under his name. With the way thus paved by the great tragedienne herself, the Famous Players proceeded to enlist one stage celebrity after another, until today that company has the unique record of having introduced no less than forty-five well known stage stars on the screen, many of whom have become permanent photoplayers.

¶ Richard A. Gradwell, sales manager of the World Film Corporation, says he is not a radical. He is the man who made the Oliver typewriter famous. He brings a fresh viewpoint to the industry. In an exclusive interview in the Motion Picture News next week he states his attitude.

Though the Famous Players Film Company was the first to institute a program of feature productions, its pioneer work was so successful that the company was soon forced to increase its annual output.

In November, 1913, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company was organized with the purpose of increasing the artistic possibilities of the screen. It has among its stars many notables, among them Geraldine Farrar, whose entry into the motion picture world was one of the most sensational events of the year.

The desire of these two producing companies to ally themselves on the same program resulted in the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation in September, 1914, which included in its program of releases the productions of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Corporation and of Pallas Pictures.

Kiddies Scheme to Aid Poor

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Cincinnati, Dec. 8.

Arthur Bennett, manager of the Strand theatre, Muncie, Ind., has enlisted the "kiddies" of that city in a plan to help the Winter Relief Association. Mr. Bennett's plan is as follows: Every child under the age of twelve will be given admission to the Strand from 3 to 5 o'clock for either of these articles: three potatoes, apples, onions or turnips, one egg, two oranges, one can of tomatoes, corn or peas, or one glass of jelly or preserves. All will be turned over to the Winter Relief Association each night for distribution among the poor.

Can't Close Theatre Legally

CITY ATTORNEY J. P. LINDSAY, North Tonawanda, N. Y., to whom Mayor B. L. Rand referred a communication received from the State Civic League a few days ago, calling attention to the decision of the Appellate Division at Albany, holding that Sunday film shows were illegal, and requesting that such theatres here be closed, stated that there is only one moving picture theatre in North Towannda that operates on Sunday, and that cannot be closed under existing conditions. When the Appellate Division at Rochester held several years ago that movies on Sunday were legal, Henry Klinger, proprietor of the Oliver theatre, secured a permanent injunction restraining the mayor or police from interfering with the operation of this show on Sunday. To attempt to stop the showing of moving pictures at the theatre would be against the order of the court. Mr. Lindsay, therefore, holds that the Oliver theatre cannot be legally closed.

With one division of the Appellate Court holding that Sunday movies are legal, and another maintaining that they are illegal, Mr. Lindsay says that will be up to any court that is called upon to try a case growing out of attempts to close moving picture theatres on Sunday was to use its discretion.

Mr. Lindsay says that the division of opinion among the courts on the question is likely to result in the State Legislature trying to untangle the situation by the passage of new legislation bearing on the question.

"News" Ads Duped in West

Manager "Curly" Calvert, of the Bluebird Exchange in Omaha, has one of the most attractive offices in the city. The walls are decorated with Bluebird advertisements, and these advertisements are the page displays clipped from the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. "They are the most attractive Bluebird pictures I can find," said "Curly," "so I decided to use them. My road men, every week they go out, carry the advertisements from the NEWS with them."

Rothapfel's Rialto Will Show Vitagraph Blue Ribbons

IN a contract signed last week between S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto theatre, New York City and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E company, the former agreed to exhibit Vitagraph features in his house during the year 1917. In addition Mr. Rothapfel has already booked the special Anita Stewart feature "The Girl Philippa" for the week beginning December 24.

Mr. Rothapfel only came to this important conclusion after examining the vehicles, casts and direction of Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Program for the next year, and receiving the assurance that Commodore J. Stuart Blackton will give actual supervision to every Vitagraph production to be offered during that time. He was also influenced by the second E. H. Sothern picture, "An Enemy to the King," which made an enviable record at the Broadway house.

"The Girl Philippa," the first feature that will enter the Rialto on the new arrangement, is said to be the greatest Anita Stewart picture so far made. It is adapted from the serial by Robert W. Chambers which ran in the Cosmopolitan magazine. It runs eight reels in length. Mr. Rothapfel says of this feature: "It is really a colossal dramatic production. It affords an exhibitor exceptional opportunity to show his artistic ability and it is more than excellent picture material for the public. Miss Stewart has every reason to be proud of her work in this production."

"The Girl Philippa" will start its run beginning December 24. The Vitagraph pictures that will appear in the Rialto subsequent to this have not as yet been announced.

Gold Roosters Route Eastward from Pacific

Making his first trip west of Ontario, Leon F. Ouimet, head of the Pathe organization in Canada has just paid a visit to Western Canadian cities, including Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

Mr. Ouimet informed the NEWS representative that hereafter his company would release a Gold Rooster feature each week in Vaucouver, routing the pictures eastward from that city. Heretofore these films have been released further East, and the prints were not fresh when playing in the British Columbia territory.

Many publicity helps are now being furnished to exhibitors by Pathe, most important of which is the publicity campaign book furnished in advance of the showing of each feature. In this booklet every piece of printed matter bearing on the picture is illustrated, and there are also several detachable stories to be torn off and turned in to the newspapers. Several specimen ads for the picture are also shown, and mats and cuts for these will be furnished by the exchange.

Mr. Ouimet commented on the unusual excellence of the motion picture theatres of the West, as compared with those in Eastern Canadian cities, and is very much pleased with present prospects. He expects to cover the western territory at least once every three months hereafter.

Censorship Advocates Plan Coup in Wisconsin

One of the Most Drastic Measures Ever Proposed Will Be Presented to Legislature—Move Is Unknown to Exhibitors

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 9.

While the local exhibitors peacefully sleep on, secure, as they think, from any danger of censorship, and at a time when the state exhibitors have allowed their organization to fall to pieces for the reason, as a number of them have stated, that the Milwaukee exhibitors will fight their battles, the censorship advocates have made all preparations to slip over in the coming session of the State Legislature one of the most drastic censor bills ever proposed.

Though the bill has not been drafted nor the man who shall introduce it been selected, all the plans are laid and according to the best information the bill will provide for at least three censors, one to be appointed for Milwaukee, one from the eastern and one from the western part of the state.

It will be the duty of these censors to pass upon every foot of film shown within the state. Naturally three or more censors are to be paid a salary, just what salary has not been decided upon, but it goes without saying that the positions will be large and fat ones, for it will fall upon the exhibitor or the exchangemen to pay the censor fee. As state laws take precedence over any city law, this proposed bill will knock the present censoring arrangement as it is now being worked out in Milwaukee, higher than the proverbial cocked hat.

The first information of this proposed bill will no doubt come to Wisconsin and Milwaukee exhibitors from this article. So quietly have the censorship advocates worked that nothing was learned of their purpose until a tip was dropped to the local representative of the NEWS of what was coming off. In this connection it was disclosed that the club women of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, are back of this proposed bill or rather they have been selected by certain politicians to furnish a few more lucrative state jobs.

It seems that during the past year certain of the Oshkosh exhibitors have used very poor judgment in the selection of their programs. This fact was seized upon by the club women and it is understood that as a part of their argument for the passage of this proposed bill they will cite these instances that are said to have occurred in Oshkosh. Unless the Wisconsin exhibitors wake up very suddenly this proposed bill will become a law, for the plans for its passage have been very carefully laid, and the majority of the rural representatives have been lined up in its favor.

Censorship Advocates Waited Their Chance

The censorship advocates have been biding their time since they were defeated at the State capital some two years ago when they attempted to put over a State censor bill. At that time the Wisconsin Photoplay Exhibitors' Association was in existence, and was considered to be an active factor in the politics of the State by the various politicians. This, together with the fact that the Milwaukee organization was very active against the bill, and had proven to politicians how effective the photoplay houses were as a means to defeat political candidates had much to do with the defeat of the bill.

Seeing in the present situation with the dissolution of the State organization and the let down on the supervision of State politics by the Milwaukee organization, an opportunity to slip over the measure they desired, politicians have quietly framed this new bill. This exposure of the plans in the NEWS will no doubt come as a complete surprise to the advocates of the proposed bill, who have considered that their plans were completely under cover.

Whether the bill becomes a law or not depends very much on how strong a showing the State exhibitors—the men outside Milwaukee can make at the coming session of the Legislature. It has been known for a long time in Wisconsin politics that whenever Milwaukee was against a bill the majority of the State representatives were for it, and did all in their power to put it over. On this account Milwaukee exhibitors will probably only be able to swing a few votes against the proposed bill. However, if the State exhibitors will get together and show the members of the State Legislative body that if the bill is passed they will not only be hurting Milwaukee exhibitors, but exhibitors among their own constituents, they will probably think twice before voting for it.

If it serves no other purpose than to weld the State exhibitors back into a strong organization and to fully awaken Milwaukee exhibitors to the constant danger of a radical censorship bill, this proposed bill should prove to be a blessing in disguise.

Exchangeman Ranks in Chamber of Commerce

W. C. Bachmeyer, manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., at Cincinnati, has been elected president of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce at the first annual meeting of the new organization.

The Associated Film Exchanges became an active organization affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce after a struggle of more than a year as the Cincinnati Screen Club, which failed of bringing about the co-operation among exchange managers, exhibitors and the public which was desired. Under the new arrangement the film men are allied with the strongest commercial organization in Ohio, and are battling under the same banner that floats above the cohorts of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Other officers elected in the new organization were: W. S. Wessling, Pathe, first vice-president; C. E. Holan, International, second vice-president; I. W. McMahan, McMahan and Jackson Enterprises, treasurer; Stanley Hatch, Vitagraph, corresponding secretary and H. Serkowich, Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, managing secretary.

Goldwyn Star in East Preparing for Her Debut

Mae Marsh to Be Ably Supported in All Departments of New Surrounding Organization—Real Picture Star Approaches Great Future

MAE MARSH, star of "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" has left D. W. Griffith for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Miss Marsh, now in New York City, is the first star to be acquired by the newly formed Goldwyn Company. At present Margaret Mayo, scenario editor, is completing the scenario in which she will appear under the direction of a widely known and able man.

The popular little actress accompanied by her mother and several sisters arrived in New York last week after taking leave of D. W. Griffith in Chicago. Miss Marsh has worked under the direction of Griffith for upwards of four years. Starting with the Biograph Company she soon won the director's recognition and after that it was simply one success after another. In "The Birth of a Nation" and in "Intolerance" she received country-wide acclaim for her wonderful performances. "The Escape" was another picture of Mr. Griffith's in which she appeared to distinct advantage.

Advised to Accept Offer.

Mr. Griffith, it seems, contrary to all precedent advised Miss Marsh to accept the offer of the Goldwyn Company. If he hadn't, according to the star herself, she wouldn't have taken it. Of course, Mr. Griffith was sorry to have her go. He believes the position she holds in the hearts of the motion picture going public can never be filled by any other player. But Mr. Griffith was on the lookout for her success.

When she arrived in New York, she found the following telegram waiting for her at the hotel:

"I wish you every possible success in your new venture. While I feel that your loss to our company is one that can hardly be replaced I shall be as glad and proud as yourself for all the new successes which I know are sure to come to you.

"D. W. GRIFFITH."

Other Stars Coming Soon

The acquisition of Miss Marsh is a big step, but only one of the many contemplated by the organizers of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The members believe that never before has an organization been launched that indicates such prosperity as does theirs. There have been many cases in which an individual identified with the dramatic stage has entered the realm of motion pictures, but heretofore no producer of the legitimate stage has marshaled all of his forces of a successful organization and brought it intact into the world of films.

Edgar Selwyn, Margaret Mayo, Crosby Gaige, Arthur Hopkins and Archibald Selwyn have been the guiding spirits behind some of Broadway's most successful pieces. They have encouraged and surrounded themselves with a group of the most promising playwrights of the younger generation, whose work will be available for production by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

The shrewd business judgment of Mr. Goldfish was responsible for the signing of Miss Marsh by the new corporation. Oddly enough, she, the first star to be announced, is not a product of the dramatic stage, but of the screen itself. The initial story in which she will appear will reveal the fine discretion of the minds that henceforth will direct the destinies of the clever little actress.

Sure-Fire Scenarios

The initial safeguard in this direction is to be found in the assumption of the duties of scenario editor by Margaret Mayo. Her successes on the stage in recent years have been numerous—a great percentage of her work has been successful. By placing such a competent woman in charge of the scenario department the company will endeavor to eliminate from their pictures all of the shoddy and cheap inconsistencies that are so often to be found in even some of the best features of today.

Other stars and the productions in which they will appear will shortly be announced by the Goldwyn Corporation, which will within a few days be established in its new quarters. Studios will be located both in New York and on the Pacific coast.

Pennsylvania Censors Report Results of Year's Labor

Great Good Accomplished by Noble Band—Public Morals Improved and Fees Collected

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 9.

INFORMATION of much importance to the motion picture trade is contained in a preliminary summary issued today by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, of data that will be contained in the board's annual report. It shows among other things that in the fiscal year which closed on December 1, 1916, the drama held the position of supreme importance among the subjects submitted to the board for approval, constituting 50 per cent. of the entire number of films offered, while comedies represented 40 per cent., and the remaining 10 per cent. were classified as educational or travel pictures.

Wisconsin and Milwaukee Exhibitors—Wake up! Censorship advocates in your state have made all preparations to slip over in the coming session of the state legislature one of the most drastic censor bills ever proposed. Full story on page 3986. Organize—now!

This is regarded as significant of the relative popularity of these various classes of plays throughout the nation, as the Pennsylvania motion picture field is a very broad one catering to all classes of people, and it is assumed the film producers gauged the numbers of each class of film offered, by the popular demand.

Another significant point brought out by the preliminary report is that while 45,429,000 lineal feet of film were passed upon by the censors, including 17,107,000 feet of originals and 28,412,000 in duplicate reels, this was a falling off of about 3,000,000 feet of film as compared with the preceding year, when the total was about 48,500,000 feet, of which 18,933,000 feet was of originals and the rest duplicates.

Several causes are advanced for this falling off which is recorded, notwithstanding the motion picture is more popular than ever in Pennsylvania. Joseph A. Berrier, chief clerk of the Board of Censors, accounts for the difference on the theory that there is a tendency in the smaller cities and towns for the smaller theatres to consolidate, with the result that there are fewer, though larger, theatres than one year ago. Another theory is that many exhibitors are reducing the number of reels per program.

That the censorship board is more alert than ever in enforcing compliance with the censorship law is shown by the fact that fines collected in the year just closed aggregated $5,385, or $1,420 in excess of the year ended December 1, 1915. It is recalled that it was early in the year just ended that Governor Brumbaugh issued a statement calling for the co-operation of all of the 6,000 or 7,000 persons on the state's payroll, in whatever capacity, to act as self-constituted detectives in reporting to the authorities any instances of films being displayed without the certificate of approval of the censors being thrown on the screen.

Either the exhibitors of the Pittsburgh and Western Pennsylvania section have been far more lax in obeying the censorship law than those in the rest of the state, or the authorities in that section have been far more alert in detecting violations, for the report shows that 70 per cent. of all fines collected were from exhibitors in Pittsburgh and vicinity.

Much additional information of interest to the trade is contained in this preliminary report, which is as follows:

The Board has physically examined 17,017 reels, averaging one thousand feet each, or, 17,017,000 lineal feet. The number of duplicate reels certified to is 28,412, or, 28,412,000 lineal feet.

Out of this number 89 subjects were condemned in toto, comprising 244 reels, or 244,000 lineal feet.

Out of a total of 45,429 reels, originals and duplicates, 11,914 eliminations, or parts, were ordered out by the Board.

Among the number of subjects submitted for examination we find that 50 per cent. are classified as dramas, 40 per cent. as comedies, and 10 per cent. as educational or travel pictures.

Open Booking and Higher Admission

Manager Willard C. Patterson of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., is the first manager in the South to adopt the open booking plan and to raise the admission price to twenty cents.

The first attraction in this house under the new policy was "Mary Pickford" in "Less Than Dust," followed by "Clara Kimball Young" in "The Common Law."

Mr. Patterson believes by the adoption of this plan he can furnish to the patrons of his theatre a far better class of pictures and stars than he could under the old policy.

Sig Samuels, the owner, is a very popular picture man in the South, owning a number of theatres in various Southern cities.

Censors Endorse Another

Lynchburg, Va., December 7.

The first board of censorship ever assembled in this city gave its unqualified endorsement to the photoplay, "The Little Girl Next Door," at a private showing here. Manager Roland Hammer, at whose theatre the picture was showing, called the meeting on his own account that Mayor Jester and representatives of the Woman's Club might pass upon its merits before it was placed before the general public. Mrs. James R. Kyle and Miss Anna Jones represented the club.

After viewing the photoplay, which is in six reels, the board decided it was capable of teaching a striking lesson which every father and mother should see. After witnessing the performance, Mayor Jester said he hoped every parent in the city would see the film and he unhesitatingly placed the stamp of approval upon it.

Manager Hammer advertised the film extensively, using the mayor's endorsement conspicuously in his publicity, and did good business during the three-day engagement in Lynchburg.

N. A. M. P. I. Officials in Executive Session of Importance

Out of Town Conventions Attended and Motion Picture Information Freely Given

THE fight for the Sunday Motion Picture Show will be carried direct to the people of New York City and State by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Exhibitors' League of America. At a meeting of the Executive Committee held Tuesday afternoon, December 5, a committee was appointed to co-operate with all other organizations and interests in city and state who are opposed to Sunday closing. This committee consists of President William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor, Walter W. Irwin and Lee A. Ochs.

A statewide campaign will be planned to enlist financial and political support for carrying out the fight. The first propaganda move will be the distribution of slides to every motion picture theatre in the state, inviting signatures to protest cards, which will be gathered into a monster petition expressing the sentiment of the 3,000,000 motion picture patrons of the state. This committee consists of Arthur James, Samuel H. Trigger, and Louis L. Levine.

There was a unanimous representation of the executive committee at yesterday's meeting, including the following:

William A. Brady, Walter W. Irwin, Louis F. Blumenthal, J. E. Brulatour, Louis L. Levine, Arthur James, P. A. Powers, William L. Sherrill, Samuel H. Trigger, Adolph Zukor, Lee A. Ochs, William M. Seabury, Frederick H. Elliott.

The executive committee will meet again this week to receive the report of the committee and determine on a definite course of action.

Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott and General Counsel, William Seabury, attended the Second Annual Convention of the Safety First Federation at Baltimore as representatives of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

One of the features of the Safety First Convention was the address of Mr. Seabury, on Saturday morning. His subject was, "The Motion Picture Industry and Public Safety," and it was the final address of an extremely interesting session. In the course of the talk he placed before the delegates a description of the industry and how it is represented in the National Association, explaining the various classes and how the organization, as at present constituted, was calculated to bring about the co-operation so vital to such an industry.

Powerful Organization Starts in 'Frisco

Distribution of Features Guided by Westerners to New York Leaving Blazed Trail

WITH the primary purpose of buying and distributing features of quality and merit from independent producers and company's selling states rights, Sol Lesser, in association with Leon D. Netter, has just opened up the Home Office of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., in New York.

With branch exchanges already established in Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Philadelphia and New York, the masterpiece is already exploiting several big productions among which are "Purity," featuring Audrey Munson, and "The Libertine," featuring John Mason and Anna Hanlon.

With the efficient organization of The All-Star Features, Inc., of San Francisco as the back bone, and with the record of success of that office as the animating force, the policy of this newer sister corporation, will closely parallel the workings of the coast offices, and will operate in harmony with them for maximum efficiency.

The offices on the fifth floor of the Longacre Building in New York, will be the headquarters in the eastern territory, and act also as buying office for the states of California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico, the territory handled by the All-Star Features, Inc., of San Francisco.

Records Established by Ince

"Civilization" has since June 2 created many real records in the motion picture business. Of the last of these records is the number of prints which are now working for this production. In less than one hundred and fifty days since the production made its appearance on Broadway in June, there are at the present time in the United States over one hundred prints actually working.

Mastbaum Dinner in Philadelphia as Ever an Event

Selznick Announces Acquisition of Lubin Studio, Where He Will Produce—Leading Film Men Listen to State Censor's Defense and Reply

A NOTABLE event in film circles was the gathering in Philadelphia, Wednesday evening at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel of two hundred men, representative of the motion picture industry. With professional, and men prominent in commercial life they were the guests of Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company at a banquet which he tendered to the members of the Stanley Exhibitors' Association recently organized.

As the guests entered the dining room an orchestra of seventy-five pieces, under the direction of Harry W. Meyer of the Stanley theatre, rendered the "Stanley March," a stirring and tuneful number which had been composed as a compliment to Mr. Mastbaum.

The tables had been arranged in the shape of a huge M, the initial of the host's name, and at each place were silver calendars as guest favors. In addition there were ornamental and original souvenirs of an attractive kind while the table ornaments were beautiful, and in keeping with the general atmosphere of luxurious splendor which characterized the entire affair.

It was shortly following the march to the tables that Toastmaster Joseph A. McCready arose and asked the guests to face the direction suggested by the flashlight artists, who took a picture of the party, copies of which will be mailed to the guests. During the dinner an elaborate vaudeville performance was given, which included a number of acts from local theatres as well as several which had been brought over from New York. Toastmaster McCready offered a felicitous speech, and in conclusion presented Mr. Mastbaum with a silver loving cup, a gift from the Stanley Exhibitors' Association.

Mr. Mastbaum said in response:

I just feel that those around me are honestly appreciative of my efforts and this gift will spur me on to greater endeavors in the future. It is a pleasure to do things when one finds that in the doing he has done something which is appreciated. So often it happens that a man will put forth his best efforts for the benefit of others only to be criticized in the doing, so that this expression of confidence, this surety of the kindly feeling of my friends strikes home with a force that will be reflected—I hope—in my future activities.

Words cannot express how deeply I appreciate the honor of your presence here this evening.

This organization was permanently launched to-day; and to-night we celebrate that event; an event—which, I am sure—will mean much for the future betterment of the industry.

We—here to-night—who are part of this great industry—exchangeman, producer and exhibitor—know that the foundation of the permanency of the motion picture is the exhibitor; for, without him, the fabric of the entire business falls.

The Stanley exhibitors have organized but for one purpose, to advance the motion picture industry to where it belongs.

I am in hearty accord with their purpose, and stand ready to do everything in my power to help them.

I would like to feel that everyone here wishes the new association success.

To be sure, it is a pleasure and privilege to have so many interesting people here this evening.

This meeting was arranged to bring the exhibitors in closer contact with the main distributors, and the producers, of motion pictures.

The motion picture industry has grown, and is growing so rapidly, that there are several important matters which, in the opinion of the exhibitors, need immediate adjustment.

Businesses of all kinds have but one main object, and that is, TO EARN MONEY.

If there are conditions existing which prevent this, they should be eliminated.

First. In the majority of cases, the producer and main office arrange the rental price of films in every locality; and the majority of local representatives of these concerns, desiring to carry out the ideas or instructions given them, hold to these prices and market the films by competitive bidding, regardless of the fact whether or not the exhibitior of that particular production will cause the exhibitor a severe loss, thus preventing him from conducting his business so that he can add new fixtures, replenish furnishings, install modern ventilation and serve the public in an efficient manner.

These methods will gradually force an exhibitor out of business, closing a source of revenue to the producers.

Therefore:

Competitive exhibitors, meet each other often.

Competitive exhibitors, meet the producers.

This will, without a doubt, correct this condition.

Second. We wish to set credit between the exhibitor and the exchange. Wherever necessary, the exchange can require a payment on account and the balance paid before the playing of the picture. This should be full and sufficient.

We want all advance deposits eliminated, as they are held permanently without interest, which is unfair and is an extreme hardship to the exhibitor.

Now, who will be the first producer to recommend the elimination of advance deposits?

¶ Benjamin B. Hampton, president of the General Film Company, has a valuable message for all exhibitors. His views are remarkable and encouraging. Don't fail to read this exclusive interview, which will be published in next week's Special Christmas issue of the Motion Picture News.

Geo. H. Earle was introduced as the first after dinner speaker. The Toastmaster added "Mr. Earle is a 'B. D.,' Doctor of Business and the king of financiers." He was followed by John McCarthy, attorney for the Stanley Mastbaum business interests. In the succession here given the other guests who spoke eulogistically, reminiscently and prophetically were: Lewis J. Selznick, Adolph Zukor, Horace Stern, attorney for the Stanley Association; Louis J. Breightinger, chairman of Penna. Board of Censors; Joseph L. Kim, state attorney and attorney to Board of Censors; Walter W. Irwin; Harry Knapp of Phila. Inquirer; Harry T. Jordan, manager of the Keith interests in Phila.; George Blaisdell of Motion Picture World. Sam Spedon, representing the MOTION PICTURE NEWS; W. Stephen Bush, Exhibitors' Trade Review; Siegmund Lubin; Michell H. Mark, of the Strand theatres, New York and Buffalo; Felix Isman, real estate magnate of Phila.; Arthur S. Friend of Lasky Co.; Jacob D. Lit; Col. Sam'l. D. Lit of the Associated Press; William E. Smith of Famous Players Co.

Lack of space, we regret, prevents us from publishing in its entirety a letter from Frank Rembush of Indiana, from which we print the following extracts:

Urgent business matters makes it impossible for me to attend your splendid gathering, which I regret exceedingly, but I cannot allow this occasion to pass without expressing my deep conviction that the plan, spirit and work of the Stanley Booking Company of Philadelphia is the most fair, logical and practical means of eliminating the many abuses in the film trade.

A few months ago I met Frank Buhler, an old friend, in Philadelphia. We talked shop and looked over his and other theatres. In direct contrast to what I found in other cities all over the country, these exhibitors were contented and working to make the most of their business. Instead of fighting each other and fighting the manufacturer and distributor, as seemed a custom to me, these men were giving their entire attention to increasing the patronage and popularity of the motion picture. It interested me so much that I stayed a week to investigate.

An institution that has been successfully organized and in good working order for two or more years, has built up and systemized all the detail necessary to carry on its work, cannot be fully comprehended in one interview, but the principles, the heart and the spirit, the power and the possibilities to help the exhibitor of the Stanley Booking Company plan was easy for me to understand.

Returning to Indianapolis most enthusiastically I presented the proposition of organization between competitive exhibitors and co-operative booking, the elimination of senseless competition, and the idea of making the motion picture more popular with our patrons.

We made a set rule to meet one hour each week—every Monday.

The slogan of our chairman is, "What are we here for?"

Another rule exists that any discussion with reference to the cut-throat methods employed in the past between each other are immediately ruled out of order.

The change was like magic. We were like exhibitors born again. Instead of spending our time trying to annihilate our competitor across the street we began to mind our own business and work towards creating new patronage. Our weekly meetings scheduled for an hour on every Monday generally last all afternoon. We find very much to talk about. Where bitterness existed a friendly spirit prevails. We are now able to say something about how the motion picture business shall be conducted in Indianapolis. We are proud to say we are affiliated with the Stanley Company.

The guests were:

Overheard at Mastbaum Dinner

Hon. Joseph Kim said: "it was possible that the Censorship bill would be amended, giving the chairman of the Board of Censors the deciding advice in the passing of pictures in Pennsylvania."

Lewis J. Selznick will put a full working force in the Lubin studios at Lubinville in Philadelphia for the production of Selznick features.

Mastbaum's Stanley theatre will present "Oliver Twist" on Monday, November 11. The management has sent invitations to the Dickens' Club of Philadelphia, 360 members to attend. The club includes in its roster some of the educators and people of the city.

In and Out of Town

Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company has gone back to Los Angeles.

Howard Estabrook left for Los Angeles last week to take a position as director.

C. Gardner Sullivan, Ince scenario chief is back at his desk in the Los Angeles studio after taking a flier through New York and Chicago.

Romaine Fielding, one of the real old-time directors in the business, is on Broadway for a spell.

H. H. Van Loan is back at his desk, from Uniontown, Pa., and the hospital.

Selig Selected Cast for "Allah"

AUTHORITIES who have been permitted to see private showings of the forthcoming Selig production, 'The Garden of Allah,' have remarked on the intensely interesting and absorbing love themes carried all through the ten spectacular reels," says an official of the company. "In brief, the plot has to do with the acquaintanceship, the love and the final outcome of two lives, that of a strange and unusual man and a passionate, impulsive woman. It has been said that 'Romeo and Juliet' is the world's greatest love tale. If this be true, 'The Garden of Allah' is the greatest love story of modern times. The deep and abiding faith and loyalty of the man for the woman, the doors of golden hope and happiness which swing open only to be ruthlessly closed at the last; the renunciation and the self-sacrifice of the woman are but details in the warp and woof of a love story that for vividness and reality will compare with any love theme of the ages."

Helen Ware enacts the role of the woman, and Tom Santschi that of the stranger who, sacrificing all for love, finds that love is all. These artists are supported by a company of players personally selected by William N. Selig for the types they portray. There are Oriental cities, glimpses of the Sahara desert, caravans of camels, nomad tribes and all that goes for colorful atmosphere. The Selig Company will soon make definite announcement of plans for exploitation of the film.

"The Truant Soul" Tops December Essanay List

"THE Truant Soul," Henry B. Walthall's new feature, will be in all branch offices of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service not later than the middle of December, according to the announcement made by George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, who urges exhibitors to see this extra-length production. He calls it the greatest exposition of Mr. Walthall's possibilities in the interpretation of an intense dramatic role, and the star agrees with him.

This production is designed for a screen time of two hours. Mary Charleson supports Mr. Walthall. The piece was directed by Harry Beaumont.

That this should prove an attraction is the belief of Mr. Spoor, who has arranged to aid exhibitors in handling it. The picture will be released Christmas Day.

Preceding the release of "The Truant Soul" will be an extra feature from the Essanay studios. It is "The Phantom Buccaneer," with Richard C. Travers and Gertrude Glover. The screen time is one hour and twenty minutes. J. Charles Haydon directed the picture.

Director Harry Beaumont is beginning work on Bryant Washburn's next feature. This is taken from "Skinner's Dress Suit" in The Saturday Evening Post.

Henry B. Walthall is prepared to begin the first scenes in his latest production. The title of this offering will shortly be announced.

Essanay's General Film Service program will continue with the Black Cat features on Tuesday, and the "Is Marriage Sacred?" topics on Saturday. Essany's best players will be seen in all of these shorter productions. Bryant Washburn is now at work in "The Girl God Made for Jones," a 33-minute Black Cat feature. Nell Craig has just completed two of them, "As in a Looking Glass" and "A Tale From the Decameron."

National Association Begins Real Activities

Committees Appointed and Plans Long in Prospect Take Form as Resolutions Are Adopted—Manufacturers Take Self-Protective Steps

THE annual "Review" has "arrived" in the motion picture business. The five reels which the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will issue shortly after the first of the year will gather together in review, all the greatest stars in the most beautiful and dramatic scenes from the most successful photoplays produced in America. The popularity of such a series can hardly be overestimated.

The committee in charge of assembling and issuing these reels consists of William A. Brady, P. A. Powers, Arthur James, Samuel H. Trigger and Louis L. Levine. Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott has been commissioned to assemble the proposed scenes for the consideration of this committee, and he is already in touch with the prominent producers, nearly all of whom are members of the association, and his lists are already taking form.

As now planned, there will be five reels each, released separately, probably on consecutive weeks or fortnights, and the subjects on which the committee is working are:

1. How the Stars Make Love.
2. Great Fights of Great Stars.
3. Funny Scenes with Funny Stars.
4. Movie Stunts and Daredevil Stars.
5. Great Thrills.

It is likely that each reel will be made up of eight to ten scenes, each one the finest in the greatest play of the star who appears. In the lists of the members of the National Association are practically every star who has been or is popular on the screen to-day. The negatives and positives of these scenes will be furnished the National Association by the producers who made them, and these notable pictures will be shown in the theatres of the country for the profit of the National Association.

A meeting that was so full of interest that it kept twenty-eight of the busiest men in the film world engrossed from 11 A. M., till long into the afternoon was held by the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on Wednesday, November 29.

Interest in Fire Prevention

The board voted to join the National Fire Protection Association, and was extremely interested in the verbal report of the meeting of the Fire Prevention Regulation and Insurance Commitee which was held on Tuesday. Executive Secretary Elliott was appointed as a committee of one to confer with the National Association and manufacturers regarding the cooperation of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with it in its plans for national education for the conservation of all the industrial resources in the United States. The immediate request of the manufacturers is that the set of ten slides containing the text of some of their educational posters be used in the motion picture theatres of the country.

A resolution of the Authors' League of America regarding the Sunday closing question was read and received with appreciation.

Yesterday charters of affiliation were issued to the Slide Manufacturers' Association and to the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc. The secretary also informed the directors that similar action was about to come from Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and that other organizations of a relative position in the industry would soon be forthcoming. The report of Treasurer J. E. Brulatour showed prosperous condition in the association's treasury, indicating that the association is taking care of itself thoroughly.

Big Increase in Membership

Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott's report showed that in the brief life of the National Association its membership has increased to 25 producing companies with prospects of having at least 90 per cent. representation by the first of the year. There are 10 distributors, 17 of the most important supply and equipment houses and over 100 individual members.

In the Christmas Issue (Live Wire Department)

The vexed question of the advance deposits now required of exhibitors by many of the leading distributing companies had its innings during the Thanksgiving week meetings of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The Producers, Distributors and Exhibitors' Branches met on Tuesday afternoon, and wound up on Wednesday after the close of the meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association. After a general discussion, pro and con, it was agreed that the Exhibitors' Branch formulate what it holds would be a fair plan to be submitted to the distributors.

In the course of the meeting, President Brady offered as a suggestion a plan for incorporating the Exhibitors' League of America so that it would become a financially responsible organization, when it could then guarantee the accounts of its members to the distributors of films. President Brady felt that this would not only solve the difficulty of the distributor, but would furnish strength to the league.

The exhibitors felt that this plan was not immediately practicable, and the upshot of the discussion was the decision that the exhibitors should formulate their plan in writing and submit it to the Distributors' Branch. It was indicated that this plan might include a rating system for the establishment of bases of credit.

President William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation presided and the following directors were present: William L. Sherrill, president Frohman Amusement Corp., New York; Adolph Zukor, Famous Players Lasky Corp.; Maurice A. Choynski, Newberry theatre, Chicago, Ill.; Thomas Furniss, Brunswick Amusement Company, Duluth, Minn.; Frederick J. Berrington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Peter J. Jeup, Detroit, Mich; Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Indiana; Samuel H. Trigger, Tremont theatre, New York; A. P. Tugwell, Los Angeles, Calif.; Donald J. Bell, Bell & Howell Company, Chicago; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Kodak Company, New York; J. H. Hallberg, New York; Hiram Abrams, Paramount Pictures Corp., represented by Kenneth Hodkinson; Walter W. Irwin, V-L-S-E, Inc., New York; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Company; and Richard A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corp., New York.

Protection Against Contract Breakers

The following resolutions were adopted:

"RESOLVED—that it is the sense and feeling of the Producers Committee of the National Association that in the event an artist commences performance on a photoplay, it is for the best interests of the industry that such artist, irrespective of any time limitations in his contract, should finish the production in which he is engaged, and in the event that such artist does not finish the production, such artist be deemed to be hostile to the best interests of the industry.

"RESOLVED: That the Producers Branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry organize a bureau of information for the purpose of disseminating information amongst the producers that would be to their advantage in the conduct of their business.

"RESOLVED: That it is the sense of the Producers Committee of the National Association that it would be hostile to the best interests of the motion picture industry for a purchaser of territorial rights of a motion picture photoplay to rent or lease a photoplay for which each limited rights were leased or purchased, without and beyond the territory covered by the contract of such distributor, and it is further the sense of this committee that any infractions of such contracts will be reported to the committee as a whole or its secretary."

Knockout for "White Slave" Film Boys at Last

The National Board takes this occasion to draw to your attention the following: From answers it has received to a query recently sent out to the exhibitors throughout the country as to the attitude of their patrons toward "white slave" films, the National Board learns that almost without exception, exhibitors are convinced that the great majority of their patrons are entirely opposed to this type of picture.

This is conclusive evidence of a well-defined sentiment throughout the country repudiating the so-called "white slave" film. Newspaper clippings, letters and official communications constantly reaching The National Board make this fact undeniable. Public opinion has crystallized upon this point. It demands that "White Slave" as a theme for commercial exploitation on the motion picture screen be no longer used.

The National Board seeks to reflect public opinion.

THEREFORE, NO PICTURE HEREAFTER WILL BE PASSED BY THE NATIONAL BOARD WHICH IS CONCERNED WHOLLY WITH THE COMMERCIALIZED THEME OF "WHITE SLAVERY" OR WHICH IS SO ADVERTISED AS TO GIVE THE IMPRESSION THAT IT IS A LURID "WHITE SLAVE" PICTURE.

This bulletin is issued in a co-operative spirit. It does not apply to strictly propaganda pictures produced obviously for social betterment and exhibited in a way compatible with that purpose. The bulletin seeks to acquaint producers and directors with public opinion on one hand, and the danger to their interest and prestige if they continue to affront it, and to acquaint them, on the other with the position which The National Board as an interpreter of public sentiment feels called upon to take.

Fox to Continue Bara and Farnum on Regular Program

Despite Rage for Special Feature Releases of Popular Stars This Manufacturer Will Stick to His Loyal Exhibitors

THEDA BARA and William Farnum are to make only eight or ten special productions each during the year 1917, all of which are to be released on the regular William Fox program.

The world's literature is being drawn upon for stories, while the supporting casts of Miss Bara and Mr. Farnum will be the best known actors of the legitimate stage. Greater time will be allowed the directors in the making of these special productions while the settings will be more gorgeous.

Despite every inducement made to Mr. Fox to withdraw these two stars from his regular program, and send them out as so-called specials at higher rentals, he has steadfastly refused.

The first released will be William Farnum in "The Price of Silence" on January 8, 1917. Its theme is emancipation for the child slaves of factories and mills, and has been reviewed in these columns.

So vital has the question of child labor become that out of the great membership of the national House of Representatives only 46 men were found with hardihood enough to vote against the passage of the bill which was signed by President Wilson on Sept. 1, 1916. Of the 46, many voted against the bill not through opposition, but because they believed it to be an encroachment on state's rights.

Miss Bara's first release in a special production will be on January 22nd in "The Darling of Paris," suggested by Victor Hugo's masterpiece "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

"I shall keep the faith with those exhibitors who have stood by me," declared Mr. Fox. "When a star becomes popular, and only the exhibitor can popularize a star by giving the public an opportunity to judge, I believe the exhibitor is entitled to share in the success and profit to be derived from that star. I want exhibitors who show William Fox pictures throughout the world to prosper."

Mr. Fox realized that in Miss Bara and William Farnum, he had two stars at least who could be taken from the regular program and exploited as specials. He has insisted, however, on maintaining a fair policy.

Announce Candidacy for Office in State League

Trigger Promises to Inject New Life Into New York Exhibitors' Organization Again

SAMUEL H. TRIGGER has announced his candidacy for President of New York Local Number 1, the Manhattan League of exhibitors, at the regular election of officers to be held on December 20. Sidney Ascher will run for the office of secretary. Mr. Trigger also announces that he will run for the presidency of the New York State League in February. Both the local and state presidencies are now held by Lee A. Ochs.

Messrs. Trigger and Ascher are well-known organization leaders in New York City, having practically fathered the early organization movement among exhibitors in this city and having brought exhibitor organization up to its high tide of prosperity several years ago in the city and in the state.

A cohesive and spirited league organization, says Mr. Trigger, is absolutely imperative at the present time with the exhibitors facing the Sunday closing law and other detrimental legislation. At the pres-

Stevenson Gets Rights to Argosy Release

H. S. Stevenson, of Cincinnati, has secured the rights to "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" for Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. The price paid for the territory is said to run up into the five figures.

Mr. Stevenson, who is recognized as one of the sherewdest exchangemen in the Middle West, has been most successful in exploiting features and selected "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" from among a number of pictures offered him. This film burlesque, which was written by H. C. Witwer and H. H. Van Loan, and which has been called the "Craziest and Funniest Picture Ever Produced," is a distinct innovation in motion picture comedy.

It is planned to book this picture in the territory acquired by Mr. Stevenson along lines used by theatrical producers, and it will be shown in the leading theatres in the same manner as a big road show. "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" offers unusual opportunities for advertising and will receive publicity throughout the country because of its novelty, the title, and through the fame of its authors, both of whom are writers of note.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" is the first State rights production to be released by the Argosy Films, Inc.

Doris Mitchell Is a Graduate from Stage

Doris Mitchell, playing the heavy feminine lead in the Monmouth-Unicorn serial, "Jimmy Dale, Alias The Grey Seal," achieved a great deal of fame on the legitimate stage before entering pictures. She first appeared in Chicago in Edmund Russell's production of "Hamlet" and later joined the company of E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe in Shakesperian repertoire. Afterwards she appeared in such productions as "Told in the Hills" and "The Coward."

While she was appearing with Arnold Daly in "The Regeneration," Henry McRae Webster, then director general for Essanay, saw her perform, and made her an offer to appear in pictures.

Hawk Buys Rights to Ivan Subjects for Foreign Territory

THE Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has completed an arrangement with the Hawk Film Company, whereby the latter, for a period of a year, became the exclusive foreign distributors of Ivan releases for the ensuing year.

The Hawk Film Company maintain offices at 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, and business offices in the principal cities throughout the world, notably Paris, London, Rio De Janeiro, Berlin and other world centres. The thorough equipment of the Hawk Film Company for the distribution of photoplays, assures for the Ivan Film Company the most thorough distribution possible to secure. Already they have exhibited throughout the more important centres and reports received from Australia, England and South America indicate a favorable reception.

Especially Prepared Juvenile Programs in Lynchburg

ESPECIALLY prepared juvenile programs for the children are becoming very popular with parents in Lynchburg, Va., and the theatres which have been catering to the little folk are beginning to realize the full value of films that make a direct appeal to the kiddies.

Loving Cup Presented to Stanley Mastbaum, President of Stanley Exhibitors' Association at Get Together Dinner at Bellevue Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, Wednesday evening, December 6th

The first series, which was endorsed by the Woman's Club, was exhibited several weeks ago at the Isis theatre and tremendous crowds thronged the theatre during the morning hours when the juvenile program was offered.

On account of being able to present the pictures only until the regular daily program hour, when the regular performances began, the ladies behind the movement decided to transfer them to the Academy of Music in order that the children might attend the entertainment not only in the morning but also in the afternoon.

Three prizes of $2.50 each have been offered to children between the ages of 8 and 10, 10 and 12, and 12 and 14 years each, who write the best account of four different performances, stating what they would like best to see in the future.

New Lead for Hart

Mary MacIvor is William S. Hart's new leading woman in his next Western by J. G. Hawks.

Miss MacIvor never appeared on the stage. She was born in Barnesville, Ohio, in 1899 and owing to her delicate health never attended school. With her mother, who acted as her tutor, she traveled extensively and then acquired the education which equipped her for the career she is now setting out upon.

Selig Forces Speak Highly of Latest

"The Garden of Allah," soon to be released by the Selig Company, is highly spoken of by all concerned in its production, and some few who have seen it privately exhibited. Helen Ware enacts the leading feminine role, that of Domini Enfilden, and believes the opportunities offered her for emotional work in this, are superior to those in the average part.

Both the director, Colin Campbell, and William N. Selig are well satisfied with their work, the former believing it the best picture to which he has ever laid his hand. Mr. Selig personally attended to many of the details of production.

Producer Pleased with His Product

William L. Sherrill, the president of the William L. Sherrill Feature Corporation, one of the producers of the Art Dramas program, expressed himself as being highly satisfied by the picturization of "The Rainbow," which is to be the Art Drama release of January 4, 1917.

It was constructed by A. E. Thomas, and the success of its original production as a play on the legitimate stage proved how well the playwright knew his public.

Dorothy Bernard plays the leading role in "The Rainbow." In her support are seen Robert Conness, who is also being starred on another program, and Jack Sherrill.

Exhibitors' Advertising Said to Offend Morals

Kansas City has been hearing a lot about censorship, and the necessity of closer supervision in the past week or so. Dozens of women and men representing various civic bodies have been complaining of the character of advertising done for some of the moving picture shows, and especially of the lobby displays. Responsive to these complaints, an effort is being made to have the censorship ordinances interpreted with reference to lobby displays, and the pictures shown before the theatres may be the subject of censorship as well as the films.

Two Kalem Series Run Indefinitely

Kalem officials claim a record in being the only film producers to have two series productions, that, because of their popularity have been extended for an indefinite period. One of these series, "The Hazards of Helen," also holds the record for length of run as it is now well in its third year, and apparently going stronger than ever. The other series "Grant, Police Reporter," though only in its third month, jumped so quickly into the front rank of popularity among General Film releases that Kalem found it necessary to announce that no limit would be placed on the number of episodes in the series, but that it would run indefinitely.

Schenectady Mayor Raids Seven Picture Theatres

Mayor George R. Lunn Says He Is in Favor of Sunday Motion Pictures, But He Is Compelled to Obey the Law

MAYOR GEORGE B. LUNN, of Schenectady, N. Y., raided seven motion picture shows in his city last Sunday, December 10, in spite of the fact that he is a firm believer in Sunday film exhibitions.

The mayor says that while he is a firm believer in Sunday picture exntertainment, his duty to the laws of the State comes first. In order that his action might not be misconstrued, he called up the New York newspapers by long distance telephone, and had the following to say:

"The movie men realize I am in sympathy with them, but know I feel I must obey the law. Schenectady is in that section of the State of New York where decisions of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court for the Third Department are the highest rulings regarding points of law, unless questions be taken up to the Court of Appeals. Consequently I arrested the seven managers of movie shows opening to-night and closed the houses."

The proclamation read by Mayor Lunn to the crowds turned out of the movie houses was as follows:

"In issuing an order as I do to-day closing the motion pictures on Sunday, I am doing my duty as chief executive of the city contrary to my belief as to what is right and just in the premises.

"I believe that the majority of the citizens of Schenectady believe in motion pictures on Sunday, and I also believe the majority of the citizens of the city are in favor of the enforcement of the law.

"It is time that the dead hands of a century ago ceased to weigh down upon the clear desire of this generation to develop a nobler and better life among its people."

William A. Brady stated on Sunday that "a living picture is not different from those one may see any Sunday in the art galleries, and therefore I fail to understand why the old-time Blue Law should be invoked to stop one and not another."

"Dale" Stirs Up Trouble for Legal Minds

"JIMMIE Dale, Alias The Grey Seal," the sixteen-episode serial, starring E. K. Lincoln, Edna Hunter, Paul Panzer and Doris Mitchell, which is being distributed throughout the United States by the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, has become a bone of contention in Chicago.

If a rich man steals from the rich to aid the poor and starving, is he justified in committing such breaches of the social law?

This is the problem which Judge Dennis E. Sullivan has been asked to decide in the Superior Court of the Windy City. The questions involved were brought up by Major Funkhouser, Second Deputy Superintendent of the Police and the Municipal Censor Board. Immediately the Monmouth Film Corporation, in conjunction with the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, commenced mandatory proceedings to compel Chief of Police Healey to issue a permit for the exhibition of the films.

Undersea Picture Taken Far Out in the Tropic Ocean—Crew of The Nautilus Descend Through a Trap Door in Universal's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea"

J. E. Willis, Western representative of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, acting in concert with Jules Burnstein, vice-president and general manager of the Monmouth Film Corporation, through his attorney, Elijah N. Zoline, is waging a vigorous campaign for the freedom of the screen. Mr. Zoline's contention that Jimmie Dale is in no way deleterious to the public weal, raises a question of vast interest to the moving picture industry as a whole.

Major Funkhouser, Corporation Counsel Ettelson and Chester E. Cleveland, his first assistant, contend that in the Jimmie Dale Series, Jimmie Dale, constantly in search of excitement, imperils the morals of the community by his benovelent misdeeds.

"On the contrary," asserts Mr. Zoline's petition, filed with the court. "The picture demonstrates the evil effect of crime, and shows that no matter how clever a criminal is, in the end he is detected and brought to justice. Instead of being injurious to the morals of the people, Jimmie Dale is a mighty sermon for the maintenance of the law and order, and shows that there is nothing profitable in a criminal career."

President Ike Schlank, of the Unicorn company, in speaking of the situation, said:

"The Jimmie Dale Series was printed in the People's Magazine, published by Street and Smith, New York City, which has a wide circulation. They were written by Frank L. Packard, author of the 'Miracle Man,' a George M. Cohan success. While the series created a sensation and were eagerly devoured, no objection was raised to their publication in magazine form,' says an official of the company. It is, therefore, difficult to realize why they should prove a menace to morality when produced upon the screen."

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

Wise Window Card Placing Proves a Winner

NOT every theatre can afford the elaborate campaigns of advertising undertaken by the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, but it is just such keen competitive conditions as are found in this live city that point the way to the more modest undertakings possible at less expense. Many years before New York had her magnificent Strand, Seattle had her Clemmer and other beautiful theatres which were the marvel of Eastern visitors, as Seattle herself is the marvel of all who come there. So it is not surprising that unusually big things have been done by a theatre seating twenty-two hundred people in such a city.

Manager J. G. Von Herberg makes the statement that the Liberty is the largest motion picture theatre advertiser in the United States, if newspaper advertising alone were counted, but that is only the beginning of the campaign for business which is kept up day and night by this courageous management. It will not do to sleep on the job in Seattle, and so the Liberty has progressed to a stage where "loop" Fullerton, as he is locally known, finds plenty of things to keep him busy on this work alone.

Next week some of the "stunts" pulled off by Mr. Fullerton will be told about, but before taking up the whole story we are going to show how carefully and completely Mr. Fullerton worked out a single item which exhibitors everywhere should take the utmost advantage of. We are going to show how, through the use of store windows and locations which money could not buy, the Liberty Theatre got an advantage that would have represented a prohibitive expenditure had they paid a price based on the value of actual space required. The story is probably better told in Mr. Fullerton's own words:

"In preparing our window card campaign, we decided to bill only the main thoroughfare, as we believed our card-message was only for the people already downtown. It was an easy matter to decide the best streets, the crowds were an evidence of that, but it was an entirely different matter to get the locations we wanted, locations which the legitimate houses could not obtain, but which we deemed essential to a successful campaign."

"Right here is where we met our next difficulty, for it was decided that the man who would later place these cards should be the man to make the investigation. We were fortunate in getting a lithographer of varied experiences, at a salary which we later found was the highest paid on the Coast, but it proved a real economy, judged by the high-class of work and the splendid results achieved! By a tactful approach and straight from the shoulder talk, he was able to get locations, hitherto considered as "impossible"—and we were ready to start. From one hundred cards the amount quickly rose to 250, then 350 and from plain black and white cards the present three and four color cards have evolved. The cards were of unusually high-grade stiff cardboard stock, the kind that would not curl up in the window. However, some of the more exclusive stores still held off—so to solve the problem of these stores as well as get locations in front of the counters of soda fountains (good all the year locations in this climate) as well as in front of the cashier's box in restaurants, we had glass covered frames in plain, neat designs, to match the woodwork of the window or store interior made and we won over forty or more locations. These locations were of double value because in practically every case they represented exclusive showing in a highly desirable location.

We believe the window card campaign has helped our business in two ways: First it serves as a connecting link in our advertising between billboard and newspaper, by keeping our theatre's name and the play showing, constantly before the people—and second it directly helps the matinee business. With the thousands of people shopping or promenading to and fro in the business section, the card's message proved a veritable magnet, drawing the crowds already downtown, to our theatre.

The illustration of window cards shows the striking novelty of design of some recent cards by Mr. Fullerton. They are in two and three colors with tone variations. As you will notice they are aimed to be effective in their simplicity, attractive by choice of cuts, colors (which do not show in reproduction) and brevity.

Fox Pulls Stunts on New York

William Fox has been pulling all kinds of stunts in connection with his big million dollar picture, "A Daughter of the Gods," now showing at the Lyric theatre in New York. Among other absolutely new wrinkles, suggested by the character of the picture, are child's primer A B C books, in two color decorated initial letters, with cute rhymes telling the kids all about Anitia, and the Birdie who died and became a charmed person, and the Cat who swallowed birdie and so on. And a special Art Exhibition in the lobby, showing all the charms of the several characters in the picture, including

Surrounds Pictures Artistically

Lowell C. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, believes as much in the drawing power of artistic screen settings as the old time stage director believed in handsome stage settings. He has found also that the setting does not detract from the picture but rather enhances its value. He has recently installed a transparent border over the top of the screen and wings. This border shows a Minnesota lake and forest scene and the dim lights behind give a sunset glow to the view. The scene is restful and Mr. Calvert says lessens the fidgeting during waits, which are sometimes unpreventable.

R. G. MARSHALL.

Used Regular Employees to Good Purpose

Manager Magaro, of the Regent theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., believes in cutting out all lost motion. Consequently he is all the time devising new schemes that will add "velvet" to his profits. As children's shows are now the rage, he got to figuring it out and results proves he was right. He headed his bill with Chaplin. He had cards printed admitting school children with a nickel, and eleven thousand school children received these cards from his employees, who were sent to the schools to hand them to the children when they came out.

"Live Wire" Aids "Bluebird"

Manager Calvert of the Omaha Bluebird Exchange has launched a "Bluebird Bulletin" with a correspondence space, requesting exhibitors to criticize Bluebird productions. If an exhibitor finds an advertising idea profitable, he will say so in the Bulletin. This is a department similar to the famed "Live Wire Exhibitor" of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Philadelphia Exhibitors Give Unique Endorsement to Pathe's "Pearl of the Army" in Page Ad. in Important Newspapers

Pathe Exhibitors Boost "Pearl of the Army"

THE co-operative idea of making the hand of fellowship a power, of making each exhibitor a strong factor in a steady pull-together boys' campaign, is Pathe's latest stunt, as noted in an accompanying cut which shows the top third of a full page spread in the Philadelphia papers announcing "Pearl of the Army." Each exhibitor who appears individually in this clean bunch of men helped boost each other exhibitor and the exchange they did business with. Each has a place of equal importance in the page. Each gives a powerful personal endorsement of the common undertaking. It is not a big advertising spread merely of the Pearl of the Army picture. It appears rather, from the point of view of the public, to be an organized and very hearty testimonial to Miss White's popularity, and there can be no doubt of the impression made on picture fans by this demonstration. Just a page "ad," lauding the play by the film maker, would have carried slight weight by comparison with this new and personal way of bringing it to the people's attention. This idea of a number of exhibitors co-operating for the common good needs to be thought about and weighed up. It can be utilized in many ways, the first of course occurring to the writer being the matter of censorship. Pathe has blazed the way for a lot of good and very helpful theatre advertising to come along these lines which are broad enough to suit many picture features.

Manager H. M. Osborn of the Philadelphia Pathe Exchange, is personally responsible for the putting over of this most original advertising stunt.

Mr. Osborn is receiving congratulations on his clever scheme. Incidentally "Pearl of the Army" is going with a rush.

Linder in Great Demand

Distributors from the four corners of the earth have opened negotiations with George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, for the rights to Max Linder's comedies. Competition to get the films is strong. Arrangements are under way whereby the films produced by the noted European comedian shall be shipped to Europe, Asia, Australia, Africa and South America.

One of the first to open negotiations for the Linder rights was S. Hertzberg, the pioneer motion picture distributor of the Orient. Mr. Hertzberg journeyed from his headquarters in Shanghai, China, to Chicago, to clinch the exclusive rights to Max's productions, for China and other oriental countries. An extensive distributing agency in the Argentine Republic also has sent its representative to the United States to secure the films for his territory; and another has arrived at the Chicago plant from Brazil. The rights in Mexico are under discussion with several American firms, although two Mexican agencies have put in their bids as well.

President Spoor of Essanay has received numerous bids from big agencies of Petrograd, Berlin, Vienna, Paris, London, Rome and other distributing centers of the continent for these rights.

WITH THE EXHIBITOR

Open Booking Favored by Exhibitor Tied to Program

THE accompanying letter makes out a good case against program booking. Is this exhibitor right or wrong? There seems to be a great deal of difference of opinion about this matter, but the discussion so far, from the standpoint of the live, active exhibitor, who does not fear competition and wishes free range, favors the open system of booking. It has been well pointed out, however, that so far there is no real condition of open booking, so the talk is all aimed at the future. A few pictures available for open booking as is the case to-day, do not seriously affect the position of the program producers. When more pictures are available for open booking than there are first-class houses—or when enough of these pictures can be had combined with the best pictures on the programs to fill the needs of the exhibitors of the first class—then we will have a real test, for exhibitors who feel like the writer of to-day's letter are not going to hold programs.

That is the lesson of to-day's correspondence. This man says he could have made more money had he had a choice of pictures even now available. He says only two out of twelve features were worth running—for no feature is worth running that will not show a good profit. He says present profits are very, very small, and blames his programs. He cites the injustice of neighborhood houses having a pick of programs at one-fourth the cost he has to pay. This exhibitor speaks for many. We want to hear more from such practical men, men who state facts to back up their theories. We like this letter because we know it is typical of hundreds of theatres everywhere. Let somebody answer it, if it does not speak the exact facts even. In this correspondence names are omitted so that exhibitors who want to have their say can feel that whether or not they are in the majority, makes no difference. We want their real views without their stopping to think whether or not that is the point of view they would give if obliged to go on record. We want ideas, right or wrong, new ideas that aim at bringing out the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I notice you invite exhibitors to express their view of the open market question.

I think now and always have thought the open market best for any theatre, provided the manager has the ability to select the films his patrons want. I am in a town of 28,000, having eight theatres devoted to motion pictures. Three years ago we had the opportunity of buying any film outside of those released in the General, Mutual and Universal service. We booked everything that was good and at a price we could afford to pay.. Consequently we had capacity houses, at most times.

During the past three years different feature programs have been formed and we are now using two programs supposed by many to be the best. There are hardly enough films on the open market to warrant us discontinuing these programs, so we must go along and do the best we can. In the next four weeks' program booked to us there are just two pictures that we would buy on the open market provided we could have an opportunity to buy out of the other programs. Now just think, out of twelve features we must play there are only two we feel we are making any money on. Now then out of all the releases for the next four weeks to come of all programs let me buy what I want, even at increased prices, and I will pack this theatre every day.. The cost of course would be greater, but even at that if my program costs twice as much as it does now, I will make more profits than I am making now. The present profits being very, very small. Isn't that a reason why we should have open market?

We are now forced to play pictures two days that should not be played one day. Why then should we show the poor picture to an audience of 1,000 when I can get 2,000 people with the proper picture? I am wasting two good days, something that can't be made up. Of course film rental would be higher if there was an open market, but why shouldn't it? Those that can't afford it, let them play something they can afford to, thereby drawing a distinction between the good and lower class houses. Amongst the eight theatres in this town there are four theatres showing a program that might be called just as good. It is only a question of one house boosting a program more than others. Of course the difference between this theatre and the other theatre is that this theatre is the largest, most comfortable and in every way a better theatre than the others. We also have two neighborhood houses that offer a change of program every day in the week. This means that they have six different shows from at least four programs. Or in other words they have a choice of pictures and get them at one-fourth the cost we pay.

Here we are, in the downtown district paying high prices for films, forced to play them two and three days. The neighborhood house manager comes along, books what he wants. Why shouldn't we have an opportunity of doing the same as this neighborhood house? About three weeks ago we had for opposition a stock company that stayed an entire week and another theatre in this city had a picture special for two days of that week. We could have booked other big specials against him, but we did not have the open time, our program picture took up the entire six weeks and would not allow us to cancel. Now having these two oppositions against us, we of course went to our program exchange and booked the strongest pictures they could offer. The consequence was that we were left with a half house each day and at the end of the week we could show no profit. Now if we had an open market we would have booked the strongest attractions possible, at any cost and at the end of the week we could at least have shown a small profit. Or if not a profit, we would have succeeded in keeping our house filled and the people interested. Here is another six days gone to waste. Is it possible to give any better reasons why we should have open market? If so let us hear from other exhibitors. This letter is not written by a newcomer in the business; instead, I have been in the business for the past seven years. Open market will get rid of a great deal of poor films and also the poorer houses which are no longer needed.

Not wishing to impose upon the good nature of this paper, I will say no more at this time.

Yours for the Open Market.

Efforts to Tame Wild Operators Being Studied

SAM SMITH, the operator at the Sunset theatre, Omaha, hurried into the projecting room ten minutes before the afternoon show was scheduled to begin. A line of patrons was already filing in and a number of seats were filled. Sam grabbed up the box of film and slammed it on the machine. The minute the show was expected to start he turned the glare upon the screen. The machine started clicking and lo! The reel was wound backwards. Sam swore as he feverishly began rewinding it. The crowd grew slightly impatient.

Then he started it through the machine in the right direction. In one of the most exciting places the film was torn—a jagged, ragged tear. Sam swore again and the crowd, suddenly staring into a white screen and gripping their seats as a result of the exciting picture, felt embarrassed and then again grew impatient. Another tear and several patrons stamped out, disgusted.

Sam and his employer, the exhibitor, blamed the exchangeman. Maybe they were right. Maybe the exchange had not inspected the reel. But in this case there was an excuse. Another exhibitor had not returned the film when he should have done so. It came in ten hours late, and there was only one hour in which to catch the train. The box was left at the depot, and there changed from one train to the other. No time for inspection, no time for anything. Sam's employer had advertised this picture and no substitute could be accepted. There was only one thing to do and that was to make a quick change.

Manager Jake Mitchell of the Laemmle Film Service in Omaha has tried to solve this problem. He has got into touch with every Universal exhibitor and urged him to think of the other fellow and himself, too, by seeing that his operator takes more care in rewinding and shipping.

This Totally New Idea is Worth Special Consideration. The Strand (Providence) Changes Its Name to Children's Theatre, Showing at a Glance That the Rhode Island Congress of Mothers Has Made It Their Theatre for the Time Being

House Big—Profits Small

Below is the other side of the big house ahead of its time monopoly, which so many little fellows think means sending them to the bow-wows. In these days and times one has to be pretty optimistic to feel sure of his profits. And the attached letter is one reason. Here is a theatre evidently built as so many are, to fill a "long felt want." Twice as many seats as people to fill them. But somebody was doing better than a half-full house, or this one would not have been built. This letter comes from within less than fifty miles of New York—plenty of people to draw from—the whole trouble is that expense is greater than income, and threatens to go higher. It won't go higher, permanently, though, for such matters always adjust themselves in time. If you legitimately can't make money, with your equipment, no one can outbid you on your service. What you say, however, will be read with great interest by your brother exhibitors.

Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh avenue,
New York City.

Gentlemen:—

Mighty glad to respond to call for views as asked for on page 3136 this week's "News." Going to tell you about a newly built neighborhood theatre, located in fine section of a two hundred thousand population town. Has every advantage and no opposition worth speaking of. We seat 1,000 and give three shows a night. Can accommodate 2,500 people easily, allowing for late comers to first show. BUT OUR AVERAGE IS JUST ABOUT 1,300, or a little over one-half what we can accommodate. Our modest five-piece orchestra and salaried manager eats up what advantages we might have over some possible competitor with a smaller seating capacity. Our expenses run about $800 per week and allow us about $100.00 profit, out of which we must create a sinking fund for emergencies. The expenses listed above carry an item of 5 per cent on the money invested in building and fixtures, but allow nothing for repairs or deterioration. Our film service is satisfactory, as no opposition has enabled us to steer clear of bidding for first runs. Our total cost for service averages about $150 per week, or a ratio of 16 2-3 per cent. But in a case of opposition, and this is possible almost any time, this cost for service will be doubled and make the cost one-third of our gross and incidentally wipe out all of our present profit.

Now, if it were possible for us to make an agreement or an arrangement for an exclusive service from one concern at a cost of say 25 per cent of our gross, we would be glad to do so, and it is possible that if such a service was of a superior grade, our business could be materially increased and enable us to go as high as 30 per cent for the service. Our posters cost us about $15 a week, and if these were furnished free with film it would admit of our paying an additional one and one-half per cent on the cost of film service. I would add that with our present receipts it is utterly impossible for us to use the best features every night. Superfeatures should not be put in picture houses; prices should never be raised. We hold to the one scale all the time. If there was one concern, or rather, exchange, which handled the various makes of best features and gave a weekly price year in and year out, so our patrons would be always sure of a pleasing show, our business would be steadier and our appropriation for service correspondingly higher. Moreover, we could cut out the newspaper advertising which we feel compelled to use now, and this is no small item of expense. But if I see no change in the situation for the better and very shortly at that, I am going to unload my stock to the highest bidder and make my exit.

No Milwaukee Movie Ball

Special to Motion Picture News.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 5.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Milwaukee Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, held Friday, December 1, local exhibitors decided not to hold a movie ball this winter. The decision was reached after it was learned that the Auditorium could not be secured for Saturday night, and that there was no other place available that would accommodate the thousands that have turned out for this affair.

Consider the Little Ones—and Profit Thereby

THE reason for the sudden awakening to the long, neglected children's matinee and its usefulness as a business builder, is not hard to find. The mothers of the country have made up their minds that their children shall have consideration, and the managers, after making all kinds of false excuses for themselves have decided to go ahead under very unfavorable conditions as to securing children's films and have the shows anyway.

Any showman knows the value of publicity through the children. Any showman knows that if he can get entry through the schools and mothers of the community into the homes of his city, his business is made. He may not make as much out of a children's Saturday morning or weekday afternoon performance as he would with a salacious feature for which he has signs saying, "children not admitted." But if he has a family theatre he knows which in the long run is the better policy. And so we hear of children's shows being successfully "introduced" in a hundred sections of the country at once.

The children's show accomplishes many things unobtainable in any other way for the theatre. First of all it introduces to the house, patrons that have never been there before. There is a democracy among the little folks that cannot exist with their parents. They go to the same school, whether they come from the homes of the rich or the poor. So if your general patronage is of the high-brow class, you will add to your middle class patronage and the goodwill of people who have a vote and a say in the running of your community affairs. This may come in handy, in these days of Sunday closing and censorship. If you already have the middle class patronage, your entertainment of the children will widen that patronage to include all classes, and again aid your popularity as a manager and a good citizen.

Why not? In connection with a special children's performance give free tickets to all the children making a top grade in school; one ticket for each study the grade is attained in; similar free tickets as a reward for good conduct, good attendance, or any sufficient reason that would entitle a number of children to become better scholars through your encouragement. An exhibitor's suggestion from Plainfield, Ill. Come again, brother Moran.

The greatest argument in favor of the kid shows is the direct advertising it gives your house. The next argument in favor is the money it will bring you. If properly managed, a children's matinee fills up your house at dead hours. The only thing between you and this good money is the present scarcity of children's pictures. That will be remedied, and we want every exhibitor who reads this and wants to gain the advantage offered by children's shows to let us hear from him. Demand these programs, through these columns, and you will get them. Many of the program exchanges already have established children's departments, and are ready and willing to reissue just the pictures you need. Other companies are marking time waiting for sufficient demand to develop so they can afford to make pictures especially for children. Such pictures cost little to produce, compared with present-day features. Children's shows are given in the larger cities on Saturday mornings. In smaller towns the afternoon show will be more profitable, as the mothers will accompany the children and make a social meeting place of your theatre. So that children's pictures can have a very large circulation.

We know of several cases where the friendship engendered between the managers of the local theatres and the clubwomen or mothers' clubs has results in preventing unfair or ill considered local censorship laws.

It is time the children's once-a-week show became a permanent institution in every city and hamlet in the country. True. the exhibitor first gaining the confidence of the children and mothers will have a natural monopoly of the children's vote in that community. True, there will not be room in the average town for several children's shows. But generally there is only one wide awake and always public spirited exhibitor, who never fails to be on hand at every moment when opportunity beckons. And it is this one who will take up the children's movement at the first opportunity. We will gladly help him. That is why we write this article, in the hope that he will take us into his confidence and let us present the weight of several of him to the producer and create a demand for children's pictures.

Does Not Want Posters Sent with Films

"SEND me any posters with my film and I'll cancel my contract with you," is the peculiar ultimatum given to the exchanges by Z. E. Reasoner, proprietor of the moving picture theatre at Beaconsfield, Iowa. "I really believe that I can do just as well without posters as I can with them," related Mr. Reasoner to W. H. O'Hare, Universal salesman.

"Everybody in the vicinity knows that I run a picture show certain nights during the week and if they want to come they will come without looking up my program. If I decorate the front of my house with a lot of posters, promising some great things on the inside I have to come through with them, but if I don't have anything up the crowd will take what is offered without any hollering whatever. I am not troubled with substitutions, nor do I have to pay express charges on my posters. The people are glad to see a picture show and I am glad to give them one. When neither of us know what will be shown neither of us can say much to each other."

We wonder if Brother Reasoner had not better carry his reasoning out to a logical conclusion and get deaf and dumb ushers, ticket takers, and cashiers. His logic is too conclusive for argument, provided the people of his town are the most peculiar people in the world. Most people want to see and be seen, to talk and be talked to, and unless the rest of us are all wrong, we have been spending millions uselessly.

Posters are supposed to mean something, granting even that they do not tell one-tenth part of the story they ought to tell. If the theatre, like the school, is a place to receive a course of whatever the ruling power chooses to hand out, well and good, Mr. Reasoner. If the theatre is a place resorted to for entertainment, and everybody in Beaconsfield is not just like everybody else and does not want just the same things that everybody else wants, you are wrong, brother—dead wrong.

How would you feel, for example, if the local street car company was to remove all signs from the cars? They, too, might be glad to have you ride, and you might prefer to take a chance and get carried several blocks out of your way rather than stay off and walk! Yet this is not one bit more arbitrary than your requiring your people to see your show, paying before they know what it is. You will get those who don't care what they see, but experience tells us the majority do care, and some day a competitor more willing to take pains to find out what the people want will get those of your patrons who do care. On the ground of economy, the case is still worse, for express charges on posters are paid by the patrons who are attracted by the posters—not by you. If the posters don't attract, the Universal Company will pay you a good sum to tell them why.

Trigger for President

ent time practically no state organization whatsoever exists. No per capita tax has been paid since the exhibitors' convention in Chicago last summer. Three years ago the New York State League boasted of over twelve hundred members, with two hundred and sixty-five in the New York Local Number 1. Today, according to Mr. Trigger, there are considerably less than one hundred members in the New York local, and less than twenty-five paid up members in the state league. In the palmy days of state league membership, Syracuse with sixty-four theatres had sixty-two members in the league. Buffalo, with one hundred and twenty-six theatres had one hundred and seventeen. In Schenectady, Albany and Troy the seventeen theatres in these cities were all members.

A scheme of dollar dinners to promote social relations and bring about organization will be launched by Mr. Trigger. Some large dinners of this character are to be given at the Hotel Astor, New York City. Prominent city, state and government officials have already signified their willingness to attend.

Messrs. Trigger and Ascher will take the offices reluctantly, but believe that exhibitor organization absolutely demands their former unsparing efforts. Mr. Ascher, as secretary, will work shoulder to shoulder with Mr. Trigger as president.

Desirable Information Supplied

Reel Life, the film magazine issued by the Mutual Film Corporation weekly to announce pictures released through it has an interesting list of Gaumont Single-Reels in its issue of December 2. The titles of all pictures released to date by the Gaumont Company under the general heads of "Reel Life, The Mutual Film Magazine," "See America First," and "Tours Around the World" are listed in order. Reference is also made to the Mutual Weekly, manufactured and edited by the Gaumont Company. These pages make this issue of "Reel Life" a valuable mine of information for the exhibitor. The increasing demand for pictures other than photodramas is being supplied with ingenuity and skill. With the list supplied in this issue of Reel Life exhibitors will have a handy guide to Gaumont's past releases of this sort.

Mutual Manager Resigns

Lee Cox who was formerly manager of the Mutual Film Corporation in Wheeling, West Virginia, has resigned to become the Wheeling manager for the Unicorn Film Service Corporation. His appointment was made by C. M. Christenson, the manager of the Cleveland branch of the Unicorn. Mr. Cox brings with him to his new post a personal and friendly standing with every exhibitor in the territory which he will cover. He also was formerly associated with Mr. Christenson in the motion picture business.

Brenon Is in Florida Making "Lucretia Borgia" Exteriors

WITH two of his photodrama creations running on Broadway, "War Brides" and "A Daughter of the Gods," Herbert Brenon is now in Florida, making the exterior scenes for his next production for Selznick-Pictures, "Lucretia Borgia." Florence Reed is the star of this offering, which promises to be one of the most magnificent spectacles ever projected upon the screen. At St. Augustine Mr. Brenon has found the atmosphere he requires for the staging of medieval scenes, and many exquisite effects are being designed.

Accompanying Mr. Brenon were more than a score of the leading players and members of his general staff. The players are as follows: Miss Florence Reed, Juliet Brenon, Miss Henrietta Gilbert, Miss Lucille Zintheo, Messrs. W. E. Shay, Richard Barthelmess, William Welsh, Edward Thorne, Tony Merlo, Elmer Peterson, George Briggs, Albert Parker, Alexander K. Shannon, and Edward Bosch. Others in the party were: Roy Hunt, Charles Ritchie, David Calcagni, William Plunion, Victor Abrams, George Hall and Miss Minola De Pass, Mr. Brenon's private secretary. The players expect to remain in Florida for some time.

Robinson Crusoe His Own Press Agent

HENRY W. SAVAGE calls his five-part photoplay, Robinson Crusoe, "The Censor's Holiday."

"The most conscientious censor cannot imagine that there is anything calling for his attention in this play, so he may go to see it and enjoy it just like an ordinary human being," said Mr. Savage. "Fortunately this book hero has such a wide circle of friends that he does not need the censor's advertising to make him a box-office attraction. He is his own press agent and the best one I've found yet."

Mr. Savage is of the opinion that the trend of the modern photoplay is away from the sensational and toward the educational, including the allegorical. So firm is his belief in the upward tendency of the silent drama that he is confident that the coming generation will make the acquaintance not only of the Shakespearian characters by means of the screen, but also of the Greek and Roman heroes.

"The interest which the announcement of the release of 'Robinson Crusoe' has created among exhibitors and the general public has strengthened my belief in the future of the photoplay," said Mr. Savage. "It proves that the demand for action and adventure on the screen has been mistaken for the desire for sensations. I made a careful study of the real public before deciding to invest in the elaborate production that I have given this picture."

The liberal terms on which the States rights in charge of Warner Brothers are being granted, bring visions of affluence to the buyer who is quick to see a bargain.

New Canadian Organization

For the primary purpose of handling the World Film features, the Regal Films, Limited, has been organized in the Dominion of Canada, with offices at 37 Yonge street, Toronto, Ont. Other pictures will be bought to supplement these. The Donald Thompson war pictures have already been secured while comedies and other one, two and three reel subjects will be secured as soon as possible.

E. L. Ruddy, president of the Regent Theatres Company, operating one of the best houses in Toronto, holds an important position in the organization. J. P. Bickell, banker and a director of the Regent, and N. L. Nathanson, of the Wadsworth-Nathanson Company, are other officers.

A. S. Aronson, formerly associated with the World Film Corporation, is manager of the home office, and is also in charge of the Foreign Department.

New Cartoon Comics from Bray Studios

J. R. Bray will shortly place a new animated cartoon on the market. It will be in series form and will be released under the general title of "Percy." These cartoons have appeared in Sunday newspapers for some time. Percy is a mechanical man, manufactured by a professor. By the mere pushing of a button he can be made to do anything.

His first job is as window dresser in a department store. Percy is hired out to the manager by the professor who goes on his way dreaming of immense profits. The trouble with the mechanical man is that he insists on dressing everyone—he doesn't stop at windows. He disrobes the manager and places feminine garb upon him and then he creates havoc among all the customers of the store.

These cartoons were extremely popular when syndicated through the Sunday papers, and that they will be a success on the screen is practically a foregone conclusion.

Spanish Comic Learns American

The "Tweedledum" comedies now being released by Unity, feature a comedian of long standing in the European studios. Manuel Fernandez Perez is the gentleman. He was born in Madrid, Spain, thirty-two years ago, and after playing in continental vaudeville took to the screen. He appeared before the camera in Europe for eighteen years with such well-known foreign companies as Pathe, Ambrosio, Eclair and Eclipse.

Since he came to the United States a year and a half ago he has made fourteen comedies. Unity has only released six to date, but each week heralds the arrival of another one. When Perez came to America he spoke no English and was obliged to direct his company through an interpreter. He was obliged to work under additional difficulties, as much of the humor that appeals to European, falls flat on this side of the water. Consequently he visited theatres to look out for all varieties of comedies; to learn what style of humor the American public preferred.

Industrial-Military Feature Gets Government O. K.

HOWARD E. COFFIN, chairman of the newly created Council of National Defense, invited Rufus Steele, the author of Bluebird's special release, "The Eagle's Wings," to show the industrial preparedness feature to the members of the Council on the day they met for organization. Accordingly Mr. Steele went to Washington last Wednesday, December 6, and in co-operation with C. R. Milliam, the Washington manager for Bluebird, gave a private exhibition at the Penn Garden theatre, to the entire membership of the council.

Secretary of War Baker introduced Mr. Steele to the assemblage, and the author explained the details of the production, especially telling about the pictures taken in munition factories, and mills now operating on European war orders. As the Council of Defense has been created by law to secure the co-operation of manufacturers with Uncle Sam in time of sudden stress, "The Eagle's Wings" was enthusiastically received by the members of the council as timely and authentic propaganda to inform the public and the captains of industry just exactly what industrial preparedness means—to visualize the importance of preparation for National emergency.

President Wilson was authorized by a law passed at the last session of Congress to appoint seven civilians to serve with six members of the Cabinet on the Council of National Defense. Howard E. Coffin, general manager of the Hudson Motors Company; Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; Bernard Baruch, representing the banking interest of the country; Dr. Franklin H. Martin of Chicago, representing the medical fraternity; Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor; Julius Rosenwald, President of Sears-Roebuch Company, Chicago, and Dr. Hollis Godfrey, president of the Drexel Institute, Chicago, are the Presidential appointees who attended the showing of "The Eagle's Wings."

Secretaries Baker, War; Daniels, Navy; Wilson, Labor; Redfield, Commerce; Lane, Interior, and Houston, Agriculture, were the cabinet members in attendance—all designated by law as members of the Council of National Defense. Gen. Crozier, Chief of Ordinance, in the War Department and his assistant, Col. Hopper, were among other representatives of the Navy and War Departments who attended the showing.

Goldstein Makes Change

Louis Goldstein, long associated successfully with the Unicorn Film Service Corporation's Denver branch, has resigned to take a half interest in the Superior Features, Inc. The position left vacant by Mr. Goldstein's resignation has been assumed by R. Ehrensoft who brings to his new post the experience of several years in the motion picture industry.

Press Stunt Goes Over Big in Nation's Capital

Public Interest in Patriotic Serial Aroused by Advance Newspaper Campaign That Can Be Duplicated Anywhere by Exhibitors at Little Cost

COUNTRYWIDE interest in Pathe's latest serial, "Pearl of the Army," released December 3, was excited by the advance teaser campaign published in the two leading newspapers in one hundred of the largest cities in the country. This interest was particularly noticeable in Washington, which furnished the stage for the teaser campaign.

Beginning at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, November 26, the day the first ad was published, the telephone of the New Ebbitt Hotel in Washington started ringing, and it did not stop during the five days that the campaign continued. There was a flood of letters every day that swamped the mail clerk, telegrams from all parts of the country, reporters representing all of the biggest metropolitan newspapers, and hundreds of others who were seeking an opportunity to win the reward offered for the capture of the supposed thief being sought by Ralph Payne, one of the leading characters in the "Pearl of the Army" serial.

The elusive "Ralph Payne" did not reveal himself to the Washington reporters, who, spurred on by frequent long-distance telephone calls from anxious editors, called in the chief of police to ascertain the facts.

The first ad was as follows:

FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS REWARD FOR INFORMATION

Regarding a man of foreign appearance, military bearing, about 6 feet, with light hair and double horse shoe scar on left cheek. The man answering this description is believed to have left Washington.

He was last seen taking a taxi from the New Ebbitt Hotel to the Union Station.

A few minutes previously, a package of vitally important papers and documents disappeared.

Address Ralph Payne, Room 200, New Ebbitt Hotel, Washington, D. C.

This advertisement was published in the Washington papers on Sunday morning. Early in the day the telephone started ringing. Telegrams were received from all over the country and there were hundreds of visitors. Also, by Monday, several baskets of mail addressed to Ralph Payne had been received.

Effect of Second Advertisement

The second ad was published the next day, as follows:

THE MAN

who disappeared from Washington just after a package of internationally important documents was taken from my room at the New Ebbitt Hotel, has been traced to this section of the country.

He is about six feet tall, military bearing, with light hair, and a double horse shoe scar on his left cheek.

I WILL PAY $5,000.00 REWARD for his arrest and $25,000.00 for the return of the papers, if the seals are unbroken.

Address Ralph Payne, Room 200, New Ebbitt Hotel, Washington, D. C.

This created an even greater furore. From all parts of the country letters and telegrams poured into the New Ebbitt Hotel. Night and day the hotel was beseiged by reporters anxious to interview the mysterious Ralph Payne regarding the disappearance of the government documents, but he was not to be found.

The following day the third ad was published. It read:

FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS REWARD FOR INFORMATION

Regarding a man of foreign appearance, military bearing, about six feet, with light hair and a double horse shoe scar on left cheek.

The man answering this description is believed to have left Washington.

He was last seen taking a taxi from the New Ebbitt Hotel to the Union Station.

A few minutes previously, a package of vitally important papers and documents disappeared.

Address Ralph Payne, Room 200, New Ebbitt Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Interest was at fever heat everywhere when the fourth ad was published:

RALPH PAYNE, Room 200, New Ebbitt Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Raise your bid! Others will pay more!

I have received this unsigned letter, delivered by an unknown messenger.

I have offered all the money I have.

You will serve your country, if you will help me with information regarding the writer of this letter, and $25,000.00 reward will be paid for the return of the package, with seals unbroken, which disappeared from my room at the New Ebbitt Hotel.

Address Ralph Payne, Room 200, New Ebbitt Hotel, Washington, D. C.

It was not until the following day that there was any indication as to the real nature of this advertising. The story was told in the following advertisement printed in large space:

DISCOVER THE STORY OF THE PACKAGE STOLEN FROM RALPH PAYNE

A package, containing the secret plans of the Canal fortifications, was advertised as having disappeared from an apartment in the New Ebbitt Hotel, Washington.

This package exists only in an author's imagination.

Perhaps we owe you an apology for the series of advertisements that has appeared. If so, we offer it freely, gladly.

For the purpose of these announcements is a very serious and earnest purpose.

Many good authorities have asserted that international spies are actively engaged in this country right now—that our future is menaced by these secret enemies.

As a nation that does its work in the open, most of us do not realize that the dangers that surround us are very real.

"PEARL OF THE ARMY"

A Story of "America First"

Unmasks America's secret foes—reveals the menace that surrounds our country today—the perils of a nation that must be roused to wakefulness.

You must see this great serial, featuring Pathe's peerless, fearless, PEARL WHITE as the American Joan of Arc.

It is your patriotic duty to see this picture, and it holds a thrill for you that you will long remember.

In some cities local exhibitors made arrangements with hotels in their own cities, thereby greatly increasing the value of this advertising because of the local interest.

These advance teaser ads are included in a full page of advertisements on "Pearl of the Army," prepared especially for the theatres that show the pictures. These plates are offered for sale to exhibitors at $1.50 for the full campaign.

Spurrier Moves to Baltimore

Baltimore, Maryland, Dec. 5.

Frank B. Spurrier, formerly manager of the Greater Vitagraph office for this territory, has been made Baltimore manager for the Pathe Exchange, succeeding Harry Reddish. Mr. Spurrier was located in Washington where the headquarters for the Greater Vitagraph controlling the Baltimore territory is located. He took charge of the office on Monday, November 20th. Mr. Spurrier is well known in Baltimore, as for several years he spent two or three days a week visiting the local motion picture exhibitors.

Film Building Needed in D. C.—Three Offered

At the recent meeting of the Washington, D. C., Exchangemen Managers' Association further discussion of the proposed film buildings occupied a good part of the time. The plans of the building proposed by J. Costello were laid before the exchangemen for their approval and suggestions. The film men have given hearty co-operation in such matters at all times.

At present there are three film buildings being proposed, plans of which have been offered to the exchangemen for consideration. These are to be built by The Munsey Trust Company, Tom Moore and J. Costello. The city is not in need of nor could it support three film buildings, erected in accordance with the latest strict rules of fire regulations; but it is in great need of one such building, but just who will be the successful winner in the present real estate and financial struggle, it is not possible to state.

Another matter of importance discussed at the meeting of exchangemen was the handling and rates of films and paper by the various express companies. This has been recognized as a matter of vital importance in the industry, and the local exchangmen are desirous to ascertain how best they can minimize errors, expedite delivery, and reduce expenses. A committee consisting of George Mann of Paramount, S. Meyer of Vitagraph, and Sydney B. Lust of Selznick Productions was appointed to look into the matter and report at the next meeting. WILLARD HOWE.

Missouri Lawmakers Must Be Shown

Kansas City, Mo.

That the moving picture theaters of the city are not observing the rules passed by the City Council to protect the patrons from fire is the statement of F. B. Hamilton, Superintendent of Buildings. Mr. Hamilton, with W. H. Gardner, secretary to the fire warden, recently made an inspection of every theatre in Kansas City. In several cases the city ordinance requiring fire exits had been violated. Most of these houses are very small, and the buildings were built some years ago. Kansas City's theatres are generally known as being among the best in the Middle West. During the past three years the buildings have been constructed with the most modern sanitary and safety features. H. C. BLEIL.

Hope for Repeal of Censorship's Onerous Burdens

THE exhibitors of Kansas have the best chance in the world to secure the complete repeal of the censorship law if they get busy. The condition is such that earnest work now will bring big results, while a careless handling of the situation, may bring worse hampering than now exists.

The recent election put into the state legislature a large number of law makers who either believe the law should be changed, or are sure that it should be modified. The exhibitors in many districts are alive to this opportunity, and are working on the legislators to show them that the best interests of the people demand that the law be repealed. At the same time, many other interests are working on the legislators, to convince them that the law should be made more stringent, and that changes should be made which will make it even more uncomfortable for the exhibitors and more expensive.

A surprising number of the newly elected members have expressed themselves against the censorship law as it now stands—surprising, because it has been true that in only a few districts did the exhibitors do much effective work before election. Now that the lawmakers are chosen, an effort is being made to get the exhibitors to line up their friends in the legislature, and to bring all possible influence to bear on the lawmakers to secure a law that will be fair to the picture business, and beneficial to the public at large as well.

Kansas City's chief trouble is that the ordinances require pictures to be approved by the recreation department, in case of question, but many pictures are run, without objection and without review. The force of censors is not adequate to review all pictures, so that no notice is taken of lack of censorship except when the department especially "calls in" some picture. The department calls in pictures which have been condemned or at all criticized by the National Board, or the board of Chicago, New York or Kansas. Exhibitors have got into the habit of paying little attention to whether the picture may be run without censoring or not, trusting to the exchange managers to see to the censorsing when it is necessary. The exchange managers understand the situation, and there has been no trouble from them. But the newcomers, especially the states rights men, do not always understand the situation, and many of them first learn of it when they are the subject of charges from the department.

"The Witching Hour" Sold

Morris Tobias, booking manager of the corporation formed to handle the Frohman Amusement picture "The Witching Hour" in New York state and Northern New Jersey has filled so many orders even at this early date that instead of doing business with seven prints he finds need for a dozen. In the twenty-four hours after the closing of the contract with the Frohman Amusement Corporation, Mr. Tobias booked the picture for six houses for a week's run at prices ranging from $1,000 to $1,250, while no less than thirty-three bookings at $100 a day each were signed.

The Time Is Coming—When the "Good Old Days" Go!

Nothing the Matter with the Business—Just Cleaning House and Setting Things in Order—It Will All Come Out in the Wash

By Sam Spedon

WHAT'S the matter with the business?" We are asked this question every day. Everybody asks it of everybody else. The answer most often given is, "it is all balled up," meaning there are so many reasons, it is impossible to give one specific answer.

Overproduction is probably the most sensible answer, but this is only general, and does not in itself account for the "chaotic" condition of the busness—production does not diminish, it increases; every week we read of new producing organizations coming into the field for which there is no demand.

The exhibitor knows, or ought to know, the answer. Smaller houses are going out of business where the larger houses are crowding them out. A three or six hundred seat house cannot compete with a larger one in the same neighborhood. If the smaller house tries to give the same class of program as the larger, the expenses are greater than the income. If it presents an inferior program, it loses its patronage. When the smaller house closes, that makes one less for the exchanges to supply. If there are two or three smaller theatres in a town or neighborhood obliged to close when a larger or more attractive theatre opens its doors, there are two or three theatres less to use the programs of the exchanges.

Small House Problem

In the meantime while this process of elimination is going on, there is a demand for more one and three reel pictures, such as we used to have, because it is the only hope the smaller competing houses have to exist. They want cheaper pictures, good pictures at less cost than features which they cannot afford to rent, and must, if they expect to compete. Very often they cannot get them at all if the other house is protected. Take paper and pencil and figure out the income of a house, and then subtract the overhead expenses and the answer is indisputable. This is not theory, the writer has been over the field and studied the situation. One "sales talk" tells you that a feature will draw as well at its second showing, four weeks after the first, as it did at the first showing in the other house. This is true—if the other house is not showing a newer and better feature at the same time. Very often the exhibitor will take a chance, by charging an increased price of admission, but he cannot do this 365 days a year. If he makes a "cleanup" he may try it again; if he does not, he is always suspicious and cautious.

An exhibitor in Brooklyn told me he has a 300-seat house, and would be glad to sell it and go in some other business. His reason was—competition and Standee ordinance. If he could stand one hundred people back of the seats he could make a living, but that is a thing of the past; the police won't allow it.

Another exhibitor in New York said his business was awful. His answer was "high cost of living." The fact is the income doesn't equal the outgo. We have just passed through infantile paralysis, and now we may face the enforcement of the Sunday closing law.

CENSORSHIP DISCUSSED IN WASHINGTON

With a view of spreading a better understanding as to what censorship of the motion picture means, W. D. McGuire, executive secretary, and W. F. Persons, of the executive committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, appeared recently before the Monday Evening Club in the assembly room of the local Y. M. C. A. in Washington, D. C. Commissioner Louis Brownlow of the District of Columbia and Dr. George F. Bowerman, librarian of the Carnegie Public Library, made speeches.

Commissioner Brownlow made it emphatic that he was opposed to film censorship, declaring it undemocratic and un-American, but at the same time he stated that theatre managers must use more careful judgment in the selection of films in Washington or some more exacting measures from the civil authorities would be the result. He stated that he would look to organization and the public to settle this matter rather than an organized body of censors.

Mr. McGuire made a concise statement that public opinion should govern the showing of pictures, and on this subject gave some very helpful points and suggestions. He took occasion to express a disagreement with Commissioner Brownlow regarding the use of nude figures on the screen in subjects like that of "Purity," stating that the art of motion pictures had risen to the plane where the use of a nude figure in no way suggested vulgarity.

Mr. Persons offered a very interesting address of a retrospective nature, familiarizing those present with the development of the motion pictures industry. He spoke of the co-operation of all branches of the industry for a common good, stating that a further co-operation of public, exhibitor and manufacturer to be the best means of censorship. He cited the National Board of Review as an example. He believed that a legal censorship was entirely unnecessary.

Mrs. John J. Locher also made a short address, declaring that the best way to solve the motion picture problem was to begin with the children, and this the Federation of Women's Clubs, which Mrs. Locher represents, is doing by experimenting with children's matinees.

Not All Features Pay

We know of big pictures now running in elegant theatres that are not taking in enough money to pay overhead expenses. They have been running the productions too long, and are losing what they made in the first two or three weeks of their showing, and at the same time have lost the two weeks' advertising value. All this leads us to say: Let the merry war go on. The worse it gets the better it will be for the industry. It will work itself out to a safe and sane business proposition.

We can look forward to the time, not far distant, when we may quote in our trade papers the prices at which productions are selling—for first runs, second runs, and so on, giving an established rate on which exhibitors can depend.

When big masterpieces will be run on percentage or independently in theatres befitting the requirements of the picture, at prices commensurate with the expense of presenting them and the enormous cost of their production.

When features will be of uniform length and rented at a uniform price.

When one and three reel pictures will have an established rental price, including paper, transportation of films, etc.

This will do away with the many complaints of overcharges and favoritism which help keep the business in chaos and constant crimination and recrimination.

It is fair to presume that sooner or later we may have quotations in our trade papers of the financial standing or values of motion picture corporations, as a matter of information and investment. This appears to be the natural sequence of all business when built on a solid business foundation, and its stock is offered in open market.

War Pictures in Northwest

The official pictures of "The Battle of the Somme," put out by the British government, and controlled in Canada by the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., have finally been passed in their complete form in British Columbia, and the objections of the censor have been over-ruled. Ben Soskin, manager of the Vancouver office of the distributing company, made a trip to Victoria to take the matter up with Hon. W. J. Bowser, premier of the province, who stated that he would decide within a few days whether or not the picture could be shown without being cut.

Following a trip to Vancouver he announced that in view of the approval which had been given the film in England and in other parts of Canada, he thought that British Columbia should not object to the showing of the scenes which the censor had thought too gruesome for exhibition. Accordingly the picture was passed intact, and opened at the Globe theatre in Vancouver.

We have secured good advertisers to talk to YOU. Listen to them!

I am now selling STATE RIGHTS On that Sensational Production "ABSINTHE"

This great picture, made by HERBERT BRENON, LEAH BAIRD and MYSELF in Paris, was the biggest money getter of its day and smashed all Box-Office records. It is even better today, that's why

I Have Purchased It Outright!

Understanding as I did, the tremendous success Exhibitors in every part of the world had with "ABSINTHE" and realizing the even greater possibilities of this big winner now during the war, when all eyes are centered abroad; showing the City of Paris, surrounding territory, fighting trenches, artillery action, etc., I made the UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. COMPANY an offer for negative and complete territorial rights. It was accepted and now "ABSINTHE" belongs to Yours Truly, KING BAGGOT.

Those who have still to book it can rest their faith in the facts that HERBERT BRENON directed "ABSINTHE" while Leah Baird and myself played the leads. Herbert Brenon produced "Neptune's Daughter," "War Brides," "A Daughter of the Gods," and other huge successes.

I have spent a young fortune working it up to the minute, inserting new titles, new scenes, etc., so that it now outclasses the original picture completely. "ABSINTHE" as I have prepared it is a tremendous production.

You don't have to gamble on "ABSINTHE." It has drawn hundreds of thousands of dollars into the box offices of thousands of theatres all over the world, and is now ready to draw more money than it ever did. I own the picture, complete State Rights, and will make interesting terms for State Rights buyers for quick action.

EXTRA SPECIAL: I have had prepared the classiest advertising ever put out. Stuff for State Rights Buyers with such a kick in the copy as you have never seen. Write, wire, phone or call for terms, territory, information, etc. Address me personally—4th floor—1600 Broadway, New York.

Why Attack Only the Motion Picture?

Some Critical Persons Would Like to Make Out That "Cinderella" and "Babes in the Wood" Incite Children to Crime

THOSE who have written, informing the world of the pernicious influence of the cinema, would have us believe that children had no appetite for pirate kings, burglar Bills and all their class until the introduction of the cinema, which is the new root of all evil.

Still, as we have this supposed instrument for evil in our hands, let us not be indifferent about that which has been said in criticism. Let us remember the saying which we all feel to contain an enormous truth. "It were better for a millstone to be hanged round his neck," etc. We will exercise sound judgment as to what shall appear on our screens and yet we will try to seek the truth in this suggestion that we are the missionaries of wrongdoing.

First we will ascertain if possible whether wrongdoing existed before the cinema and then it may be we shall discover that cinematography had a previous existence. Take the story of the Garden of Eden. Now, if the cinema is the inspiration of all evil, who ran the picture house in the Garden of Eden? Take the story of Cain and Abel. Who showed Cain how to take life, and what was the title of the film? Who was responsible for the scenario of the film which led Potiphar's wife astray, and where was the screen erected which prompted Samson to visit the house where his hair was cut? It must even be that Nero saw the burning of Rome on the screen and decided it was "some" stunt.

No, we will decide that some criminal happenings have taken place, and do take place, without the inspiration of the pictures. We will go further and say that the story of "Jack and the Beanstalk" may have inspired some child to steal, that the "Babes in the Wood" may have caused nightmare, that "Cinderella" may have caused discontent, that the life of Henry VIII may have popularized divorce, that Cromwell may even now cause revolution, that Hereward the Wake may upset the throne of George.

Yet the historical things mentioned did not appear first on the screen, as far as we know.

And what of the books which have been written? If some films create crime, therefore some books do the same bad work. How can we forgive John Bunyan for introducing Vanity Fair into his "Pilgrims Progress"?

This is all wrong. Shall preachers cease to tell the story of Judas for fear of making traitors? Shall hate be omitted from literature, art and poetry for fear of killing love? If we cease to tell of vice will we increase virtue?

The opponents of the cinema will not see that films are just books in picture form in which crime always meets with its reward (a fact demonstrated by abler pens than this). There is another side they fail to grasp, yet maybe it is the core of their objection, the cinema is the greatest educator in the world. It is levelling up the various classes. You cannot keep people ignorant if the screen exists. It is more powerful than any newspaper, stronger than any official, safer than any throne, for it is the voice of the people.

Literature has produced its bad books, but no one condemns literature, yet because photographic literature has produced a few doubtful films it is being condemned, happily in the main only by those who have lived in all ages to pass sentence on something bigger than themselves.

The day of "Children not admitted" is dead, but funny to relate, the man who was probably the first to show the announcement was compelled to do so. He did not conceive the gag—it was an abortion of officialdom.

There are those who think that a suggestive poster will induce folk to view and enjoy a film which has no hint of the situation used as the subject of the poster. There exist manufacturers who imagined that the picturizing of French novels (or what is worse English stories of a similar type) after having eliminated the sultry episodes, was a clever deal, but they were wrong, they know it now, and did not take long to discover their error.

They realize that the family life of this country is too sacred and that we do not like vice flaunted. We are making good pictures but we are not always advertising them as such, for some still like the stimulating poster.

The trade is made up of a number of good business men, with here and there a fool who thinks he is a wise man—shun him.

We can rest assured that whatever real uproar there is is due on the one hand to cranks who are always looking for excuses for their own sins, or for opportunity to stand at the corner of the street and act the Pharisee, and, on the other hand, to the fool who thinks he is a wise man.

And when is the upshot of it all? Just this. The cinema is NOT the cause of the wrongdoing of children or adults any more than a ship sailing on the sea is the cause of the waves. The very suggestion is an insult to a fine industry which is already paying heavy taxes in specie.

Again we say—Hands Off Mr. Smallmind and Mr. Loud Talk.

DeMille Will Direct Yankee Doodle Boy

Shortly following the announcement that George M. Cohan's initial screen subject to be released by Artcraft, will be an adaptation of "Broadway Jones," the star's greatest stage hit, it is learned that Cecil B. DeMille has been engaged to supervise the production of this photoplay.

Mr. DeMille left Los Angeles for the East recently to be present at the New York premier of his new Farrar production, "Joan of Arc," on Christmas day. At Chicago he stopped over to show this film to the star and it was during his stay in the windy city that his engagement in connection with the production of the Cohan subject, was effected.

It is planned to have "Broadway Jones" ready for release some time in February.

Novel Theatre Idea Provokes Inquiries

Cleveland's new Mall duplex theatre promises to set a pace. Manager L. H. Becht has received two inquiries from distant points asking for details of the construction of the theatre. One came from F. A. Hernandez, Buenos Aires, Argentina, while the other was from J. B. Dervin, Times Building, New York. The latter stated he is to build a theatre along lines similar to the Mall, with an entrance on Broadway and the other on Fifth avenue, New York.

Young Men Take Charge of Another Theatre

Baltimore, Maryland, Dec. 5.

Messrs. Thomas J. Bohannon and Harry Lewy have been made managers of the Mt. Royal motion picture theater, on North Avenue near Park Avenue, Baltimore. They succeed Mr. Arthur Price, who will devote his attentions to the Rialto. Mr. Price has been manager of the Mt. Royal since it opened about eighteen months ago. He was also interested in the building of the Rialto. Both houses were built by companies of which Mr. Myer Fox is president. The same interest controls both theaters.

Mr. Price made a pronounced success of the Mt. Royal, but with the opening of the Rialto this summer his duties so greatly increased that he thought it best that he devote his attention to one of the houses and turn the management of the other over to some one else. Mr. Price will be associated with Mr. Fox in conducting the Rialto.

Messrs. Bohannon and Lewy, while relatively young men, were among the first to open motion picture houses in Baltimore and have always been directly interested in the business. They now own and manage the Wizard, located in the center of the shopping district, one of the largest houses in Baltimore. A. F. Gillaspey.

Seats Must Be Firm

No public entertainment may be held in Victoria, B. C., hereafter, in any hall or club room which does not comply with the fire regulations in regard to seats, which must be fastened to the floor. This is the substance of a notification which has just been sent out by Fire Chief Davis to those in charge of such premises, as well as to the school board of the city, as the order applies equally to the assembly halls of schools.

While regretting that the enforcement of the law in this regard will interfere with the holding of many entertainments for patriotic causes, Chief Davis states that he has no alternative, but to insist on the strict observance of the regulations.

Rotarians Reported Favoring Picture Censorship

THE Rotary Club of Berkeley, Cal., is making a strong effort to enlist the support of other clubs in the college city in an endeavor to bring about the establishment of a board of censors for motion pictures. Copies of a resolution adopted by the International Association of Rotary Clubs at its annual meeting held at Indianapolis this year have been sent to the California Civic League, the California Congress of Mothers, the Alpha Civic League, the Berkeley Federation of Mothers, the Twentieth Century Club and the Town and Gown Club.

The resolution, which has been approved by the Rotary Club, asks that parents or guardians permit children to attend moving picture shows only when pictures of exceptional purity are offered, that exhibitors set aside certain days for the showing of pictures of special appeal to children, that producers submit their productions to a board of censors before arranging for the distribution of the same, and that all Rotary Clubs work for the establishment of local boards of censors.

The censorship question has been brought up a number of times in Berkeley before various clubs and at mass meetings, but on each occasion sentiment was found to be very much opposed to this idea. There are six moving picture houses in this city, and these are conducted on such a high plane that the fact has been freely commented upon by educators and persons from the outside.

H. L. Beach, who is interested in two of these houses, was formerly president of the Exhibitors' League of California, and was one of the first exhibitors in the state to arrange with Mothers' Clubs and other organizations for a special matinee for children, which is a feature of the Strand theatre.

He is now president of the Alameda County Exhibitors' League. C. L. Mehrten, proprietor of the Varsity theatre, was also formerly an official of the State League and is known throughout the state for his stand on clean pictures. The other three houses are located near the State University and in high class residence districts, catering to college students, professors and people of attainment. Whenever the matter of local censorship is brought up for discussion at any of the clubs that have been requested to act on the proposition the side of the exhibitors and the public will be ably represented.

The Ohio State Board of Moving Picture Censors has passed the two latest Fox pictures, "A Daughter of the Gods," featuring Annette Kellermann, and "The Honor System," a film advocating prison reforms according to announcement yesterday.

Suave Swindlers Impose Upon Salt Lake Exhibitors

Dearth of "Coupon" Promoters in West Brings in New Version of "Country Store" Scheme Which Appeals to Managers' Cupidity and Enriches Crooks

HAVING killed off the Coupon Plague in the Salt Lake section, another "stunt" has cropped up. Like the coupon idea, at the first glance this new plan to "increase business and at the same time put the opposition on the rocks" is replete with lure, especially to the small town man who needs a little ready cash. Just who originated the idea is immaterial, but three suave young men are now working Montana, Idaho and Utah, respectively.

Unheralded, an urbane chap drops off the train at one of the smaller towns where there are two or more exhibitors. He sizes up the situation and goes to work. He offers Mr. Exhibitor $250—in some cases $300—cold cash before he turns a hand, just for the privilege of showing him how to make some easy money.

Briefly, it is the old Country Store game, with up-to-date trimmings, and emphasis on the trimmings.

The stores, too, fall into line and everything is lovely.

Tickets Sold in Thousand Lots

The solicitor sells bunches of one thousand or more tickets to the motion picture theatre to the storekeeper on the basis of $15 per thousand. By way of a special favor he has been known to cut the price to $10, and even $7.50.

These tickets are good for three or four matinees each week and one, possibly two, nights, as specified. The merchant buys the tickets and gives them away to his customers with every purchase. In Idaho Falls, for instance, the Farr Confectionery Company gives a ticket with every ice cream order!

After giving the exhibitor the ready cash down before he begins operations the solicitor holds out the first three hundred dollars he collects from his sales. This is to pay for his time, trouble, the bright idea, and the cost of the handsome lithographs he hands out free of charge to each and every merchant who signs up. These the merchant hangs up in his window and pastes on the billboards until his hated rival and the opposition house turn green with envy.

The exhibitor pays for the printing of the tickets. In about a week he generally comes to the conclusion it would be cheaper to install his own printing plant. However, the solicitor goes blithely along and sells tickets to every man in business, from the undertaker to the iceman, for spot cash. Generally he resents having the exhibitor checking him up, but that is a mere detail. However, it is a poor town of 10,000 wherein he does not sell anywhere from 100,000 to 200,000 tickets—because this lad is a salesman with a dissonant vocabulary. He cleans up in a week and passes on to the next town before the grand rush. According to contract, he splits 50-50 with the exhibitor.

One can picture the rush! The matinee attendance is swelled, but it is on Free Ticket night or nights that the populace clamors at the portals. They come in squads and battalions and mill around in the lobby until, disgusted, they move along to the other house—and the other house does some business.

Free Tickets Help Opposition

Joe George, a well known Idaho exhibitor, is responsible for the statement that when his opposition has a free ticket night he can always count on considerably bigger receipts at his house at ten and fifteen cents admission.

With a seating capacity of 650 and the house full, an exhibitor has exactly $4.87 in the house—and that money has been received and spent in advance.

At ten and fifteen cents admission a capacity house should bring him eighty dollars.

It is this $250 cold cash down on the nail before the solicitor starts that gets most of the small men of limited capital. He gets his money and sees his three-fourths-cent tickets coming in for months, perhaps years after.

Booklet from National Association an Impressive Work

THE by-laws of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the schedule of entrance fees and annual dues, and a list of officers and directors have just been issued in booklet form. Incidentally it is the first piece of printing gotten out carrying the new emblem of the National Association. Copies were ready for distribution at the Board of Directors meeting November 29.

At the same time, another of the folders with reprints from newspapers was issued. This time, it covered the work done by the National Association in the fight for Sunday motion picture shows. The previous issues of these folders were devoted to censorship and made a decided impression. The new folder is headed "Sunday Sunshine for 3,000,000 Motion Picture Patrons," and the imposing array of news articles and editorials in New York newspapers is witness to the work which the National Association has done so far.

Other printed matter gotten out by the National Association recently includes a reprint of the strong resolution of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers regarding objectionable advertising, and an interesting list of the films recommended for children by the producers who are members of the National Association. Since getting into its stride, a great deal of foresight is to be observed in the daily routine plans of the association officers as worked out by each.

Another Single Star Company Formed

Flora Finch will appear in comedies made by The Flora Finch Comedy Company, which has just been formed. M. M. Feely, formerly connected with the Macnamara Feature Film Company, and now president of M. M. Feely & Co., is president, Louis T. Rogers having just recently severed an eight year connection with William Fox and now president and general manager of The Rogson Film Company, Inc., is general manager and treasurer, and W. R. Wilkerson is secretary.

Miss Finch has been long recognized as one of the screen's leading comediennes.

L. T. Rogers in talking about the new comedy company, says that: "We are going to surround Miss Finch with the best cast obtainable, regardless to cost. At the present time we have on hand several original scenarios, especially adapted to Miss Finch, and I would like it understood, that we will pay top money for good original comedy scenarios. We are going to start production within the next few days."

Rights for Spectacle Sold in Middle West

Twelve million, approximately, is the population of the large slice of state right territory just sold by J. Parker Read, Jr., general manager of the Harper Film Corporation, of the Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "Civilization." The territory consists of the states of Texas, Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri. Its importance is obvious from the fact that the population is about one-tenth that of the United States and its territories, so the transaction is a big deal. The Mignon Feature Film Corporation are the buyers of the rights. The production will have its first presentation in Kansas City, and will be followed by productions in other large cities of the territory.

Loew Books Altered Feature

Louis T. Rogers, has concluded negotiations with Marcus Loew to handle the booking of "The Masque of Life" in New York State. The production is being released through the Rogson Film Company, Inc.

A special trade showing of the production in its revised form was given at the Broadway theatre, last Thursday morning. This production was originally shown at the Park in seven reels, and has been reedited by James McKay, assistant to Herbert Brenon, and is six reels in its revised form. A complete musical score has been prepared.

Selznick Appoints New York Contract Manager

Louis T. Rogers, until recently connected with the Fox Film Corp., in the capacity of general contract manager and general manager of all the Canadian territory, has just closed a five year contract with Louis J. Selznick to handle all productions released by the Selznick Pictures Corp., in New York State, with offices in New York and Buffalo.

A. I. Shapiro, former manager of the Triangle in Detroit, will have charge of the Buffalo office with quarters at 15 Swan street. The New York office is located at 218 West 42d street.

War Trophies to Help Arouse Interest

The seven-part war picture taken from Donald C. Thompson's films of the firing line entitled, "War As It Really Is," is being offered on the state rights market. Unusual inducements to the buyers accompany the picture. Over twenty-five of the best known newspapers in the country have indicated their willingness to proceed with the national advertising campaign laid out. This makes the purchase of territorial rights a peculiarly attractive proposition, because the buyer will be sure of starting off in a big way in his territory.

Besides all sorts of newspaper advertisements the publicity includes attractive lobby displays of a great number of photographs and war trophies brought back from the front by Captain Thompson. These proved a center of interest when shown at the Rialto theatre, New York.

Movement for Children's Pictures Grows

San Francisco, Dec. 1.

Representatives of mothers' clubs and parent-teacher associations of Alameda, Cal., recently held a meeting and decided to ask the co-operation of theatre owners in holding a series of moving picture shows especially for children. It is planned to assist exhibitors in arranging these programs and educational films will be selected, as far as possible. The Washington School Mothers' Club has arranged to hold its own moving picture show in the school auditorium on December 8, to raise funds for its needs.

FRED I. GOBLE.

Federal Censorship Improbable Despite Women's Aid

ADVOCATING federal censorship of motion pictures, Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts, wife of the superintendent and treasurer of the International Reform Bureau, addressed the Woman's Club of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., and urged the passage of the bill to create a federal motion picture commission, which is now before the Senate. Mrs. Crafts said that motion pictures have become a very important factor in the education of children, and as such should be properly regulated, an end which the various state boards of censorship have been unable to achieve.

The bill favored by Mrs. Crafts was introduced by Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, and is similar to the measure known as the Hughes bill, upon which hearings were held during the last session of Congress. Representative Hughes having been defeated for re-election at the primaries in his district in Georgia, his absence will take away much of the enthusiasm which had been manifested. The coming session of Congress will be short—terminating March 4—and it is very unlikely that much time will be devoted to any effort to put the bill through, especially as it is a well-known fact that President Wilson is opposed to censorship, and would doubtless veto any such measure which might be passed by Congress.

New Serial to Be Heavily Exploited by Metro

Billboards and Newspapers Will Both Do Share in Boosting Bushman-Bayne Productions

MORE than $70,000 will be spent by Metro to attract the attention of the American theatre-going public to the early coming of "The Great Secret." Already upward of $65,000 worth of newspaper and billboard space has been contracted for; of this sum, $30,000 is for billboards alone, with boards that start "somewhere in Maine" and continue to the Pacific, it is announced by the company.

Full pages, half pages, and quarter pages in the great newspapers of the big cities, following one another in rapid succession, will call the public's notice to the debut of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne in a serial photoplay. In other communities the serial fiction story of "The Great Secret" will be used. No proper form of advertising—from 48-sheet stands down to the finest heralds for all fifteen episodes—has been overlooked.

Almost all of this advertising will be used to acquaint the public with the fact that "The Great Secret" shows Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne at their best and to naming the theatres where the serial can be seen. The popularity of Mr. Bushman who, at the recent San Francisco world's fair, was crowned King of Motion Pictures, and of Miss Bayne, who was crowned Queen of the contemporary San Diego exposition, are sufficient guarantee, it is believed, of the public's sustained interest once it has been aroused.

W. Christy Cabanne, who adapted Mme. Fred De Gresac's story for the screen and is directing it at the new Quality studios on West Forty-third street, New York, has himself written the titles for all the episodes thus far completed. More than half the story was filmed on December 1 and it is expected that the remaining seven episodes will be nearing completion shortly after January 14.

The titling will reveal a considerable surprise. Mr. Cabanne is a stickler for the wording of every title. His first production with Douglas Fairbanks as the star, "The Lamb," will long be remembered as an epoch-making picture if for nothing more than the charm and humor of the titles. Mr. Cabanne has pursued somewhat a similar course in "The Great Secret."

Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Company, has sent word to all the Metro exchanges that a special staff, located in the home office, is ready at all times to lend any desired aid in helping the exhibitor advertise the coming of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne in "The Great Secret." Special advertisements, in all shapes and sizes, are being prepared as exhibitor hints and helps. A news-sheet will be devoted to each separate episode in the serial, with special publicity material for exhibitors' use. It is planned, also, to arrange a special musical score, something that never has been done before for any photoplay shorter than the five-reel feature type of picture.

Visiting Film Star Startles Cincinnati

There were a number of remarkable features connected with the visit of Alice Brady to Cincinnati on Sunday, December 3.

She had gone to that city from New York for the sole purpose of appearing in person at afternoon and evening presentations of "Bought and Paid For," the World Film play, in which she is the star, this attraction having been secured for the week at the Alhambra theatre.

Upon the arrival of Miss Brady's train at the Pennsylvania station, there had gathered a crowd of several hundred persons, mostly girls, who had read of her approach, and many of these clamored for introductions. Nine large automobiles, filled with members of the Cincinnati Screen Club, were drawn up in front of the station and those accompanied Miss Brady to the Hotel Sinton, where the ladies of the club entertained at luncheon before she proceeded to the theatre.

Her afternoon trip from the hotel to the Alhambra was very much in the nature of a pageant, for her limousine was preceded by the brass band of the Cincinnati Rotary Club, and was followed by a long procession of motor cars bearing members of the Screen Club, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the Associated Film Exchanges (made up of the Cincinnati exchange managers and forces of the other manufacturing corporations) and many individual admirers of Miss Brady.

Her suite at the hotel was fairly packed with flowers carrying cards with the following inscriptions:

"Cincinnati greets you. From Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce."

Anything in the nature of a parade with music on Sunday is strictly taboo in Cincinnati, but if any person had been inclined to complain of the brass band and procession of automobiles which attend Miss Brady upon her afternoon tour of the principal streets, and had sought the Chief of Police, he or she would have discovered that the head of the law and order hosts was mysteriously absent from town upon a suggestion from important members of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, who didn't wish their compliment to Miss Brady to meet with official discouragement.

Pathe Drama of Poison and Peril

"The Romantic Journey" is the Pathe Gold Rooster release for December 24. William Courtenay and Alice Dovey are the featured players, while George Fitzmaurice directed the picture for the Astra Company. Mr. Fitzmaurice has achieved a well deserved success as director being identified in this capacity with such well-known pictures as "At Bay," "Via Wireless," "New York" and "Arms and the Woman."

"The Romantic Journey" is a story of Hindoo magic and mysticism brought to an American locale; of a girl under the hypnotic influence of an unscrupulous Oriental; of snake charmers and poisonous cobras, and a hero who risks his life to right a wrong.

States Rights Method of Merchandising Films Approved

HARRY A. SHERMAN, president of the Sherman-Elliott Company, is firm in his declaration that the State right method of film distribution is a fine thing, providing the pictures handled in that way are worth while.

"I do not think that the five-reel photoplay, unless it is much better than the average program picture, would tempt the State right buyer," said Mr. Sherman, "unless it should be of a sensational character and that sort of picture, we, at least, will have nothing to do with. This implies, then, that the most successful motion picture for State right purposes would be the spectacle, such as 'Intolerance' or the picture with intense human interest, such as 'The Birth of a Nation.' There are others, of course, which it seems to me would suit admirably. But the picture must be good, and, if it is by some prominent author, so much the better. To my mind the play is the thing. As to stars, I think their day is fast waning. If you will recall, there were no great stars in the majority of the most successful big pictures.

"But it is impossible to guess or estimate accurately. Given a good, appealing picture there is a fine chance to come out ahead. I go largely on how a picture appeals to me, basing my price on an admission rate of 25 to 50 cents. The trouble with many exhibitors is that they are in a rut, afraid to go above their old price of 10 cents. But the day of bigger prices for admission is here. If a big spectacle is good, it can get $2 prices. But I repeat, it must be a good picture, and then there can be little doubt as to the outcome.

Canadian Censor Boards So Numerous They Form League

DISSATISFACTION among the officials of the Canadian province of Saskatchewan over what they considered the lax standards maintained by the Manitoba-Saskatchewan inter-provincial censorship board at Winnipeg, for a time made it appear that a separate board to pass on films to be exhibited in Saskatchewan would be established at Regina.

Hon. J. A. Calder made a trip to Winnipeg in relation to the matter, and conferred with Edward Brown, provincial treasurer of Manitoba, under whose department the film censorship of the two provinces has been administered. As a result of this conference it has been decided that the arrangement under which Manitoba and Saskatchewan have maintained a single board, with an agreement to divide any profits or deficits which might occur, is to be done away with, and each province will do its own censoring.

In place of the single board of three members, two of whom represented Manitoba, each province will hereafter have two censors, whose decisions will be independent of each other, but who will continue to sit together, and examine all films in Winnipeg. Thus it will be necessary to run each film only once for consideration by the boards of both provinces. The new projection rooms in the parliament buildings, containing two new machines, will be used as at present.

This will bring about a change in the situation in Alberta, which refused to enter into the agreement when it was made some months ago, but which has since accepted the joint board's decisions as its own. There now arises the necessity of choosing which of the neighboring provinces Alberta will follow, or of undertaking an extension of its own censorship independent of any outside influence.

Mayor Sets Censors Adrift

Mayor-elect Thomas Van Lear of Minneapolis, announces that there will be no motion picture censorship during his administration, and Minneapolis exhibitors are wondering what will become of the volunteer censor board that has worked with the present administration. The board has announced that it will continue its organization, but has not announced under what system it will work.

At present, films the board wants to see are brought to the city hall and exhibited. The board votes on the film and gives the result of the vote to the mayor who has in thirty-eight out of forty times followed the suggestions of the board.

The board will probably not review any films in advance after January 1, and whether it will relish reviewing films in the theatres along with the common patrons is a question.

Exhibitors, however, have faithfully lived up to all recommendations of the board and have co-operated as far as possible. A member of the organization was recently censured for trying to show a film after the censor board had voted against it.

Mr. Van Lear goes to the film theatres himself and so do the members of his family. Patrons are willing to let him decide. R. G. MARSHALL.

Sunday Closing a Real Menace Here

There is a movement on foot at Frankfort, Ky., fathered by the Men's Federation to close motion picture theatres on Sunday. The exhibitors are preparing to fight any move in this direction as they claim that they cannot make expenses without the Sunday show.

Manager McLean of the Capitol theatre, in an interview, said: "Our daily attendance amounts to about fifty per cent. of our capacity except on Saturday and Sunday, when the attendance is much heavier. This means that for five days of the week we lose money and depend on Saturday and Sunday to make up the losses. The Saturday receipts alone will not do this. The situation, summed up, means that unless the theatres are allowed to remain open on Sunday, they will not be able to remain open on other days. If the movement for Sunday closing should be carried out, it will mean the end of amusements in Frankfort." C. M. LYNCH.

Broadway Prepared for Submarine Wonders

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has completed arrangements for the taking over the active management of the Broadway theatre at Broadway and 41st street, on December 24 in order to present "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," a film version of Jules Verne's story of love and adventure beneath the depths of the sea. The picture has been completed after two years of constant effort. Devices invented by the Williamson Brothers, of Norfolk, Va., for undersea exploration and photography were utilized in the making of the picture, which is of eight reels.

Photoplay Powerful Adversary to "Blue Laws"

TO moving pictures will go credit for the first really strong drive against Connecticut's notorious Blue Laws, in existence for centuries, enforced only semi-occasionally, and at one time or another the bane of every Connecticut resident's existence. In every moving picture house in the State petitions are being signed urging the incoming Legislature to repeal the law that forbids a picture show's display on the Sabbath. In every house hundreds of people are affixing their signatures to the petitions, signers not by any means being confined to a class of people. Unbiased judges believe these petitions herald a tide of protest that will sweep the Blue Laws off the statute books for good and all.

Managers of the theatres in Connecticut have made no really concerted decision as to the movement against the Blue Laws, but beyond all doubt they will be lined up in solid organization before the Legislature comes in session in January. It is quite likely that in case the situation shows any element of uncertainty the theatre owners will request local option on the Sunday show question. Possibly the voters of each town may be given by legislation an opportunity to indicate their desires in the matter.

Put to the test of the ballot town by town there is little doubt but that advocates of Sunday shows would carry the day in all the cities. Connecticut's cities have grown rapidly in the past 18 months, and are expanding in area accordingly. In proportion has the moving picture industry grown, and in proportion the desire for clean Sunday amusement increases. The moving picture admittedly fills the demand to a nicety, and the people already are indicating a strong desire that they want Sunday pictures.

Some cities in Connecticut have managed to arrange "benefits" for Sunday evenings, these entertainments consisting entirely of moving pictures. A uniform admission fee of 10 cents is charged. Under existing conditions this admission is not sufficient to give owners any chance at all. If pictures are legalized, the condition will be remedied. Alternatives are two: raising the price of admission, or stopping the shows altogether. Men close in touch with conditions believe that the public's desire will prevail, as it always has done in Connecticut, and the Sunday pictures can be given after, say, March 1, with no violation of the law.

Careful co-operation among theatre owners is more than likely. Such action is the only thing that can secure the reform, and the owners realize the fact just as they realize the benefits to be secured all around from wiping out at least certain phases of the old Blue Laws.

Change in Baltimore Managers

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 5.

Thomas T. Hildebrandt has been made manager of the Strand theatre on Howard street, near Mulberry, Baltimore, Md., succeeding Harry Woods, who had charge of the house for some time. Mr. Hildebrandt contemplates a number of improvements, which are to be inaugurated just as soon as he can put his plans in operation.

He has been connected in various capacities with the William Fox Corporation, the World Film Corporation, the Metro Film Corporation and the Thanhouser Company. A. T. GILLESPEY.

Scotch Knights for Pickford Picture

The fact that "The Pride of the Clan," the next Artcraft picture with Mary Pickford is a story of Scotch folk has led many members of Caledonian societies throughout the country to inquire regarding the date of release. Requests for special exhibitions of the picture have been received and although Artcraft will not be able to fulfill these owing to booking arrangements, various plans are being formulated by Scottish organizations and exhibitors for "Scotch-Nights" in conjunction with the showing of the Pickford film.

There are various Caledonian societies in the country such as the Scottish Society, the Seventy-ninth Highlanders' Veteran Association, the White Heather Lodge and the Daughters of Scotland. The Artcraft publicity department realizing the value of the co-operation of these societies has provided special advertising boosters and suggestions for the exhibitor.

Favors Ornamental Leaders

There are few producers who give such attention to the subtitle as does the Triangle-Ince organization. Despite the fact that many claim the perfect photoplay will only arrive after all printed inserts have been eliminated, the worth of the subtitle is emphasized by J. M. Barrie's query of in what manner is one to convey in pantomime that one has "a brother who drinks port in Shropshire?"

Irvin Willat, in charge of the subtitles at the Ince studios, has made these essential parts of a picture an outstanding feature. The decorative backgrounds he furnishes the subtitles are suggestive and sometimes actually descriptive of the words themselves. Probably the best samples of his work are to be seen in "Civilization's Child" and "A Gamble in Souls," in each of which he instituted innovations along these lines.

Special Matinees for Youngsters

A series of motion picture matinees are to be given in Washington, D. C., the first scheduled for January 5, in an effort of the Motion Picture Committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs to induce Washington theatre men to include such performances as part of their regular program. Four matinees are scheduled to be given, the first two being free to children. The shows will be under the supervision of members of the committee, and the city has been divided into eleven districts with one theater in each district. Boy and girl scouts will act as ushers at these performances, upon the popularity of which depends the success of the committee's campaign for children's matinees. Arrangements for the performances will be completed at a meeting of the full committee, to be held in the near future.

"Civilization," the Thos. H. Ince cinema spectacle, now has forty companies on the road, and the number is increasing as fast as the exigencies of organization will permit.

Big Campaign of Publicity by Experts Makes Start

Fox Paves the Way for Numerous Openings of His Spectacle in Many Cities to Occur at Close of Year

WILLIAM FOX has created one of the biggest publicity staffs of the country for the nation-wide campaign of "A Daughter of the Gods." Each large city is treated as an individual unit, with a veteran showman in charge, assisted by hustlers in the literary and outdoor advertising departments. This refers to the organizations he is building up to take care of the Annette Kellermann spectacle and other de luxe attractions which will be played by him in first-class theatres at "two-dollar" prices.

Boston will be in the charge of E. V. Giroux. His associates in the New England campaign are Joseph di Pesa, James Decker and John Luce, and the opening will take place at a Tremont street playhouse soon after the first of the year.

Ben Stern is to manage the Chicago run, with Jack Lait, author of "Help Wanted," to look after the press and "Jim" Decker volplaning into town from time to time to make billboard contracts. The Chicago premier takes place at the Studebaker, New Year's, so the kiddies who have been joyously looking forward to this wonder-pantomime for the holiday season aren't going to be disappointed.

Louis Stern is the "elder statesman" entrusted with Louisville and St. Louis. Mr. Stern and his helpers will open up the play in the Mary Anderson theatre of the Kentucky metropolis during the closing hours of 1916. A short run will be preparatory to an extended engagement at the Shubert theatre, St. Louis, beginning the third week in January.

The Detroit company will start at the Washington theatre there on Christmas week with Edwin B. Tilton in charge. Victor Harmon will pilot "A Daughter of the Gods" at the Belasco theatre, Washington, D. C., and Will O. Wheeler will be the helmsman at the Wieting Opera House, Syracuse, both engagements opening the week before Christmas. Mr. Fox has also provided one company to play the week and half-week stands of New York State and another for Pennsylvania, following up the success of the spectacle in the Lyric theatre, New York; the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, and the Pitt theatre, Pittsburg. George Roberts and Harry Leavitt, respectively, will be connected with these State companies.

San Francisco and Los Angeles will be handled just like the big Eastern units. The first appointment made is that of "Colonel" Ned Holmes, who goes to the Coast to prepare and manage the run at the Savoy theatre, San Francisco. As fast as time is secured, other agents, managers and companies are being sent out and other large-city units established until ultimately forty organizations will have been achieved.

John Zanft is Mr. Fox's trusted right bower in the work of staging the spectacle. The big job of bookings is handled by Charles A. Miller. Randolph Lewis gets up national publicity schemes and stuff to road agents, W. C. Thompson attends to the New York daily newspaper work, and Henry MacMahon, the general press representative, supplies material to the literary periodicals. At the head of the whole complexus of organizations is Winfield R. Sheehan, Mr. Fox's general manager, who is an accredited capable man.

This new and elaborate system illustrates the great changes that have been brought about by the comparatively recent entry of pictures into the so-called "legitimate" field. Each department of the work is highly specialized. Multiple man-power is used to solve big problems.

Universal's Serial, "Liberty," is Making New Records for Thrills

Peace Picture Hits Quaker City

"Civilization," the big Thos. H. Ince picture, is receiving a hearty welcome in Philadelphia. It opened at the Lyric, one of the big legitimate houses, on Dec. 4th to a large representative audience.

All the local papers gave favorable comments and big audiences all week attested the interest that is being aroused in this picture of war which teaches peace. Ministers, club women, pacifists prominent in local circles, are giving the picture their hearty endorsement.

Newman & Marcus of 1225 Vine street, are representing A. G. Fontana in Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio and West Virginia on "Civilization." Joseph Vion has charge of the theatre arrangements at the Lyric. "Civilization" is being handled in up-to-date style.

An extensive advertising campaign in all daily papers and billboards, and effective posters were some of the means by which interest was stimulated.

A symphony orchestra of sixteen pieces under the leadership of Prof. Morris is augmented by a chorus of women's voices in the last scenes of the picture, adding much to the effect.

Prices are ranging up to one dollar for the Lyric engagement which will be of three weeks' duration.

Fifteen prints of "Civilization" are being worked from Philadelphia headquarters in different parts of the territory, all of which keeps the office force doing some tall hustling.

New Industrial Company

The Advertising Film Company, with offices in the Ordway Building, Newark, N. J., has recently been formed for the purpose of producing industrial and educational films. The officers of the company are: Harry B. Papier, president; William D. Finkelstein, vice-president, and Harold L. Miller, secretary and treasurer.

It is the idea of this company to film the largest industries in the country with a plot woven around each which will include current events and scenic views in the various cities in which the company will operate. The company has several large contracts now in the course of production and when finished, will be released to the principal cities of the United States through a national releasing system.

Harold L. Miller, formerly with Henry W. Savage, Charles K. Harris, B. S. Moss and Kinemacolor, who is one of the leading cameramen in the business will photograph and direct all productions of this company.

Ontario "Fans" Interested

As a result of the advertising campaign conducted among the Movie Fans of Ontario, there are now over 1,000 people in the city of Toronto alone, who are pledged to see "The Purple Mask," the new Universal Serial when it comes out. This work which was originated by Publicity Service Department, Universal Company, under W. A. Bach, is becoming quite an item in the boosting of important films which come into the territory, and is proving of immense value compared to the slight expense it incurs. W. A. BACH.

The Second Episode of "Patria," International Serial Starring Mrs. Vernon Castle, Introduces a Mysterious Combination of Letters Unlocking the Concealed Entrance to the Hidden Chamber

Educational Picture Movement for Youth Under Way

Washington, D. C., Dec. 7.

THROUGH Mrs. Jacob John Locher, general chairman of the committee of matinee performances and better pictures, of the Federation of Women's Clubs, announcement is made that the first of the series of matinees to demonstrate the purposes of the organization will take place in the afternoon of January 5, 1917. Eleven theatres have offered their houses for the uses of the committee and the local exchanges have donated such films as were possible to secure that appealed to those in charge. These theatres are situated in different parts of the city, chiefly in the residential sections, and will be under the jurisdiction of sectional sub-committees appointed for that purpose.

The first two performances will be free and those following thereafter will have a nominal admission. The financial part of the movement will be arranged later. The main aim of the committee is to provide suitable shows of clean, entertaining and educational pictures for the boys and girls and young men and young women, without making them "children" performances. There will be no desire to exclude adults. In fact, parents will be encouraged to attend.

It had been decided to use the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts as ushers and in other ways to put interest and responsibilities on the young folks themselves.

In commenting on the movement Mrs. Locher said she found it no easy task to secure enough pictures of the kind she desired. Francis Holly, of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, has been interested in the work of the Federation of Women's Clubs and will address the meeting of the committee early in the new year.

Sherrill's Film Bewitches All

William L. Sherrill, president and general manager of The Frohman Amusement Corporation, reports a demand from exhibitors and state right buyers for that corporation's release, "The Witching Hour."

"I have on my desk," said Mr. Sherrill, "500 inquiries from exhibitors, throughout the country, requesting open dates on 'The Witching Hour.'

"The state right buyers, evidently impressed by the various reviews on this release and the fact that it is adapted from a famous stage drama, have expressed a willingness to pay according to its merits, realizing that higher prices must be paid for extraordinary releases. I am particularly well satisfied at this, because it substantiates my judgment to release 'The Witching Hour' on a state rights basis rather than accept the offers from program concerns.

"All of this proves that the state right method of distributing photoplays of extraordinary merit is, not alone profitable, but a healthy indication of the conditions of the state right field."

Co-operated with Associated Charities

On Saturday before Thanksgiving the management of the Alhambra theatre, Cleveland, O., admitted children to the regular matinee without other requirement than that they bring at least three potatoes each. It was Charity Day. The receipts were turned over to the Associated Charities for the Thanksgiving Day dinners of the city's poor.

A SCREEN VERSION OF CHARLES DICKENS' IMMORTAL CLASSIC
"A CHRISTMAS CAROL"
FEATURING RUPERT JULIAN, & AN ALL STAR CAST. INCLUDING FRANCELIA BILLINGTON CLAIRE McDOWELL & ROBERTA WILSON
DIRECTED BY RUPERT JULIAN

FROM Maine to California and from Oregon to Texas, BLUEBIRD Photoplays are sweeping the country with a tremendous wave of popularity, and the fact we want to drive home is that BLUEBIRD popularity and BLUEBIRD superiority has not been won thru advertising or publicity BUT ENTIRELY ON THE EXTRAORDINARY MERITS OF THE PRODUCTIONS THEMSELVES.

There are no finer feature productions now being offered in any market in the world. Comparison picture for picture, considering every minute detail, from the faithfulness of the details up to the story and Stars, NO FEATURE PRODUCTIONS BEGIN to compare with BLUEBIRDS.

Many feature producing concerns are shouting STAR-STAR without regard to story or play; without regard to many other things necessary for perfect productions such as BLUEBIRD Photoplays, while BLUEBIRD takes everything into consideration, with the PLAY always first—then the Stars and then the details.

In BLUEBIRD plays we give the public real Stars. Stars that mean something; plays, novels, stories and scripts that mean something. Direction and a lavishness of details that mean something. In short, BLUEBIRD plays bring to the public EXACTLY WHAT THE PUBLIC WANTS. That's why BLUEBIRDS are sweeping the country. Every week in the Saturday Evening Post 10,000,000 readers are reading all about BLUEBIRD Photoplays. YOU can share in the tremendous National campaign now being conducted by BLUEBIRD Photoplays by arranging for booking NOW.

Fairbanks Seeks Acrobats

"The Pet of Patagonia," another Triangle-Fine Arts release, starring Douglas Fairbanks, caused the acrobatic star a bit of trouble as he was obliged to surround himself with a number of men who could keep pace with him through a series of thrilling feats which required extraordinary hardiness. In order to keep these men in good condition, to prevent them from smoking, over-eating and the like, Fairbanks instituted daily races and offered prizes for the winners. The result was that he succeeded in surrounding himself with a group of men in as fine fettle as he himself—almost.

Iowa League Official Moves

Special to Motion Picture News.

Des Moines, Dec. 8.

J. C. Collins, who has been secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Iowa for the past year, has left Des Moines and gone to Indianapolis. Mr. Collins, who owned the Ozone theatre in the Iowa capital, has been very instrumental in advancing the interests of the League and much of the credit for its success is due to him. The office he vacated has not yet been filled. Mr. Collins has given hope that he might return to Des Moines, and pending his final decision his office will be left open.

Gaumont Christmas Selection

The Gaumont Company offers for Christmas week "The Vampires" episode and four single reels. "Satanas" is the chapter from the Gaumont-Mutual photo-novel. It is released Dec. 28. This episode introduces a new and important character and ends with both Irma Vep and Moreno in the hands of the police.

The first single-reel is "Reel Life" No. 34, issued Dec. 24. Its subjects are: "The Great American Dish" (Pork and Beans), "Building Sailing Vessels," "Food Products of the Soudan" and "Rufus Rastus Rides the Road."

Christmas day sees the release of "Tours Around the World" No. 8. Florence, Italy, with many of its art treasures are pictured in this number, scenes in the Swiss Alps, and the Theve river, France.

"See America First" No. 68 is released Dec. 27. It takes spectators for a trip "Among West Virginia's Mountains and Rivers." On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, animated for the screen.

Merciless Cutting Leaves Alaskan Film a Sensation

From Twenty Thousand Feet Down to Four Thousand Feet Makes Wild Northern Views Snappy Throughout

MOST remarkable pictures of a scenic and educational value have been brought to Los Angeles and prepared for showing by Al. Smith and W. A. Hillis, who a few weeks ago returned from spending six months in Alaska and on the islands near there.

Approximately 10,000 feet of negative was secured while on this motion picture filming trip, and this has been edited to slightly more than four reels, which will be released as a feature production, or may be used as a series of travelogues.

While the film was being projected at Slipper's Accesory store, it was viewed by T. L. Tally, one of the most successful exhibitors of Los Angeles, and he immediately booked the film for his theatre; there it was shown in connection with "The Common Law" and other features of like value. The critics in reviewing the Tally show while these pictures were on, although only one-reel was shown each week with a five or seven-reel picture in almost every instance gave more space to the Alaskan scenes than to the other film. After the second week Tally came to appreciate the value of the Smith films, and featured them on his program, the first time a one-reel subject, at this house, was ever so advertised. The weekly rental rate for one-reel was much higher than any previous price paid by Tally, and greater proportionately than the rate for his features.

The 4,000 odd feet has been titled "Alaskan Wonders in Motion," and may be divided into four separate subjects, or run as one. One-reel is of particular interest at this time as it shows a trip along the government railway to the most inland point to which it has been constructed. Smith and party spent several weeks at Turnagain Arm, named by Captain Cook, where exceptional scenes were made showing the greatest water bore of the world in action. This comes in before the tide, traveling at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour, and usually attains a height of thirty feet.

Smith and party spent some time at Kodiak Island, the home of the Kodiak bear. W. A. Hillis is an American sportsman, nationally known, who has won many medals at the largest shoots held in the country. He personally supervised the hunt, and brought down a large specimen when it was not more than forty feet from the camera. It required five shots, all of which took effect, to kill the animal. The hide measures twelve feet in length.

The Childs and Miles glaciers, two of the wonders of the world are shown. For days the cameraman battled the waves of the Copper River to get closeup views of ice falling from the glaciers, and several times waves twenty feet in height dashed over him. Ice falling into the river caused waves to cross the stream against the current.

Prior to the trip North, Al. I. Smith served as cameraman for a number of years. He also filmed "Capturing Mountain Lions Alive in Montana."

"Intolerance" for Australia

Sidney, Australia, will be visited by D. W. Griffith's spectacle "Intolerance" about the first of the new year. Hesser Establishes New York Bureau

After two years of success in Canada the Hesser Publicity Bureau has opened New York offices at 1128-1129 Aeolian Hall, where Capt. Edwin Bower Hesser, the managing director, will make his headquarters. The main office of the bureau is in Montreal, with branches in Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver. In Canada, they have handled the publicity and exploitation of Metro Pictures since their entry into that field, and recently exploited "The Crimson Stain Mystery." The Canadian business will be continued as heretofore, under assistant directors.

The new offices will have a complete art department equipped for originating all sorts of designs for advertising purposes, and for the creation of artistic titles. Motion picture advertising will be specialized in, and the handling of all sorts of publicity for producing and distributing concerns will be under the direct care of Capt. Hesser, who created "The Masque of Life" campaign, and is now pushing the Donald C. Thompson film, "War As It Really Is" recently shown at the Rialto theatre, New York.

A department of foreign advertising is also maintained for the making up of film ad copy in French, Russian, Italian and Spanish. Foreign publicity campaigns can thus be handled directly from New York, which should be extremely valuable to American manufacturers seeking export markets. Canadian exploitation of big film features is another branch of the Hesser business.

Peaceful Mexican Border Story Filmed

Mexican superstition, ignorance, and their attendant dangers form the basis of the plot in "The Evil Eye" in which Blanche Sweet is being starred by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. It is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program, January 4. Though the major portion takes place in Mexico, the tale, which was written by Hector Turnbull, has nothing to do with the present crisis in international affairs, and should not be classed with war films.

The title of the picture refers to the little electric lamp which is worn by Miss Sweet when she examines the throats of the Mexicans, in an epidemic of diphtheria.

Tom Forman, Parke Jones, Webster Campbell, Henry Martin Best, Walter Long and William Dale are among those who appear in support of Miss Sweet in this production which was directed by George Melford.

Sennett Signs Shuahua

Mack Sennett, general director of Triangle-Keystone has engaged the youngest actress in the world to appear in a forthcoming comedy release. She is Shuahua Boulden, and was only twelve days old when the press agent sent the story out. Shuahua is the daughter of Joseph Boulden, a Keystone cowboy, and her mother is a cowgirl. Mr. Boulden denies the report that the Hawaiian dance craze caused him to name the girl, Shuahua.

Buffalo Film Men Will Oppose Sunday Closing

Meetings Called and Motions Made Which Evince Determination of Public to Support Exhibitors in Approaching Fight

ALL Buffalo is up in arms ready to fight any move to close local film houses on Sunday and with the backing of Mayor Louis P. Fuhrmann and the press, a hot fight is promised if it is found that, in the last analysis, the recent decision of the Appellate Division holding Sunday motion picture entertainments illegal, applies to this part of the state.

The exhibitors have lost no time in getting together on the proposition, for they realize that if the Sunday shows are prohibited, they stand to lose all, in fact, one manager is authority for the statement that without Sunday, 70 per cent. of Buffalo's film houses would have to close their doors.

One hundred exhibitors attended the meeting of the Buffalo Screen club at the clubrooms, 11 Court street, and thoroughly discussed the measure. A motion to "lend the moral support of the Buffalo Screen club to the managers of Buffalo theatres against the closing of the theatres on Sunday" was unanimously adopted. The new managers' association recently organized in Buffalo with Dr. Peter C. Cornell, manager of the Strand theatre, as president and with a membership of over 100, is also opposed to Sunday closing and declares its intention to wage a hot fight if "anything is started."

In Buffalo, Sunday is the one big day of the week for the motion picture houses. Every theatre in the city is packed to the doors and long lines wait patiently for seats at the larger houses.

Buffalo wants motion pictures on Sunday and any attempt to take them away will meet with a most determined opposition.

West Coast Players and Directors Gambol "Off the Lot"

Los Angeles Marvels at Photoplayers' Ability and Appetite for Social Diversion at Thanksgiving Time

THANKSGIVING season of the west coast film colony was indeed a festive one for screen players, they taking part in two balls, and a number of prominent ones officiating at the championship automobile races at Ascot Park.

The most elaborate event was that given by the Motion Picture Directors' Association at the Rose-Room of Hotel Alexandria. This was of the nature of a dance and buffet dinner. The ball room program included several novelty features in which the directors took an active part. Victor Schertzinger of the Ince studios presented the association with a new one-step composition titled "M. P. D. A." Composer Schertzinger led the orchestra, and the number was encored time and again until the dance lasted more than an hour.

The directors' ball was the most successful social event of its kind ever given for members of the west coast colony. Every studio was represented by its leading lights, and practically every prominent personage engaged in the industry in and about Los Angeles was present. It was an exclusive event, strictly invitational, and attended only by people engaged in the production of motion pictures. The array of beautiful gowns seen there is said to have been the most elaborate ever worn at a coast social function. Credit is due the committee consisting of Wm. Robert Daly, chairman; Allen Curtis, Wm. D. Taylor, Joseph De Grasse and Roy Clements. They had the hearty co-operation of every member of the association.

The reception committee was composed of Otis Turner, Scott Sidney, Robert Leonard, Charles Swickard, George Nichols, Reginald Barker, Lloyd Carleton, Al. E. Christie, Thomas Heffron, William Russell, Charles French, Marshall Neilan, H. T. Massey, Frank Beal, and Lois Weber the only woman member of the association.

Those serving on the floor committee were: Raymond B. West, Eddie Dillon, Frank Lloyd, Edward Sloman, Wm. Worthington, J. P. McGowan, Norval McGregor, Richard Stanton, Ben Wilson, Francis Ford, Lloyd Carleton, J. G. Blystone, David Kirkland, John Conway, E. J. Le Saint and Hobart Bosworth.

Younger Hubbard Discovers Motion Picture Art!

Elbert Hubbard II., whose illustrious father wrote "A Message to Garcia," reports a revival of interest in the book since Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announced that the picturization of "A Message to Garcia" would be released December 11.

Mr. Hubbard arranged for a private view of the film and, at its conclusion, sent a message of congratulation to the Edison studio folks and to Robert Conness and Mabel Trunnelle, who are featured.

"A Message to Garcia" has been booked by all the leading exhibitors in the vicinity of East Aurora, N. Y., where Elbert Hubbard II. resides and presides over the destiny of "Roycroft."

In different parts of the country, leading booksellers have again started to advertise the book, realizing that the Edison picture, released through K. E. S. E., will stimulate interest in the work.

Will Show "The Truant Soul" at Studebaker Theatre, Chicago

"The Truant Soul," an Essanay seven reeler, with a screen time of two hours, featuring Henry B. Walthall, will be released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay on December 25 as its first special feature. It will have a private showing at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago, December 12.

Kaiser Gets First Crack—Rival Royalty Sore

Rumor has it that Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany will view "Civilization" at a private showing in Berlin, according to the publicity department of Thomas H. Ince. The Kaiser will sandwich it in between his various directorial duties on the half dozen fronts or so that Germany is defending these days.

President Wilson has looked at "Civilization" and has endorsed it. Pope Benedict wants to look at it and so does King George of England and the Kaiser of course doesn't want anyone to get ahead of him.

Mutual Short Subjects for Close of Year Are Various

"THE TWINKLER," featuring William Russell, will be released as a five-reel Mutual Star production in the week of December 18. Henry Leverage, the author, is serving a sentence in Sing Sing, and is the editor-in-chief of "The Star of Hope," a monthly prison magazine. The picture vizualizes the true story of one of Sing Sing's former inmates. The production was filmed at the American-Mutual studios under the direction of Edward Sloman.

On Monday, December 18, E. K. Lincoln will be shown in a two-reel drama, entitled "Buddy's Christmas." This is a tale of how a poor little mountain youth was responsible for the settling of a mountain feud, and the marriage of the daughter of one of the clans to the only remaining member of the other clan.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," a one-reel Gaumont scenic, picturing Morocco, Chantilly and scenes along the Mediterranean, is scheduled for release Tuesday, December 19.

On Wednesday, December 20, "Mutual Weekly" No. 103, in which events of national interest are filmed, and "See America First," a split-reel on same reel with "Kartoon Komics," by Harry Palmer, will be shown.

"The Elopement," a one-reel comedy, is scheduled for release on Thursday, December 21.

The third of the "Uncle Sam's Defenders," one-reel series, will be shown Friday, December 22. This chapter deals with the graduating of the sailor lads from the landlubber class into seasoned salts before they are assigned to warships. Some extensive views of Newport and Annapolis Naval Academy are also shown in this reel, which is entitled "A Jack Tar in the Making."

The fourth single-reel Star Comedy entitled "Every Lassie Has a Lover," and featuring Alice Dovie, is scheduled for release on Saturday, December 23.

Rube Miller is starred in a two-reel Vogue comedy, entitled "Fickle All Around." In this production Rube is what they call "a lover of all the ladies," and loves them all regardless of size or looks. "Reel Life" is a one-reel magazine from the Gaumont studios. They will be released on Sunday, December 24.

The fourth and last chapter of the sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" will be released on December 18. At the time this chapter is shown an announcement and picture of the winner for the idea for the sequel will be given. During this week Chapter X of the thrilling story of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," featuring Helen Holmes, and Chapter V. of "The Vampires" will be released.

Thanhouser Loses to McClure

Jerome Beatty, former Director of Publicity for the Thanhouser Film Corporation, has resigned to join McClure Pictures. George T. Bindbeutel, formerly editor of "Motor Print" succeeds at New Rochelle.

Undersea Photographers Incorporate

The Williamson Brothers and The Submarine Film Corporation have now completed their organization for the making and marketing of Submarine Photo Dramas, of which definite announcements will be made in the near future.

"Our first picture—the first Submarine Motion Picture ever made, and known throughout the world as The Williamson Submarine Expedition Picture—has already cleared over a quarter of a million dollars," said an official of the company.

"The second picture, '20,000 Leagues Under the Sea' made in partnership with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and the first photo drama ever made under the sea, is destined to make two separate fortunes for its joint owners."

The Submarine Film Corporation is composed of the Williamson Brothers and prominent business men of the South. T. S. Southgate, president, is a millionaire broker of Norfolk. A. F. Cathey, vice-president, is a power in the Coca Cola industry.

Capps, one of the directors, is Vice-President of the Seaboard Air Line Railway. Nathaniel Beaman, Treasurer, is the President of the First National Bank of Norfolk. George and Ernest Williamson are respectively secretary and manager.

This is the company that has expended half a milion dollars in perfecting deep sea photography, and made possible the filming of submarine pictures.

Due to his long experience in the theatrical and motion picture business, Ernest Shipman has been selected to act in the responsible capacity of business manager.

Selig Advises Buyer of "The Crisis"

After a conference with William N. Selig, it was announced by Harry A. Sherman, president of the firm of Sherman-Elliott, Inc., of Minneapolis, Minn., that the western premiers of "The Crisis" will be events of the very near future. These premiers include both Chicago and the Twin Cities.

Winston Churchill's story filmed as a Selig feature play will be presented with special musical score and elaborate advertising.

The Sherman-Elliott Company is planning to open Chicago offices in the near future and these will be in charge of J. A. Brehany who is now in charge of the Minneapolis offices.

Mr. Sherman, while in Chicago, announced the engagement of C. J. Bulliet as general publicity director for the western campaign planned. Mr. Bulliet is a newspaperman of experience and has also served as dramatic critic on newspapers throughout the West. For the present he will be employed in the Minneapolis offices.

Twenty-nine Stars to Shine from General in Week

THE Vitagraph Company announces through General Film Company that it will release hereafter every Friday one of "The Dangers of Doris" stories featuring Mary Anderson. Jack Weatherbee plays the male lead. The series will deal with the amusing adventures of a country girl of enterprising disposition who is suddenly thrown into a city environment.

In General Film Service for week Dec. 18-23rd inclusive, twenty-nine distinguished stars are featured. Edith Johnson is the first to be seen as she appears in the initial release for that week, "The Five Franc Piece," a two-reel Selig drama dealing with the attempted theft of a modern war secret. "A Lesson for Somebody," a one-act comedy from the Vitagraph studios precedes the always interesting Selig-Tribune followed by a one-reel Biograph drama, "The Conscience of Hassan Bey," which is a story of the Orient, featuring Lillian Gish, as the daughter of a rug maker, supported by Robert Harron and Alfred Paget.

"The Little Brown Mole," a two-reel drama, the 3rd of the "Black Cat Features" by Essanay, is the first picture screened Tuesday. Lillian Drew and Sydney Ainsworth are starred in this picture in which a little brown mole plays so important a part. "The Fatal Violin," a one-reel Kalem comedy in which the fun is supplied by Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch will follow. Then will come "A Daughter of Earth," a two-reel Biograph drama in which Gretchen Hartman plays the lead, supported by Alan Hale and Jose Ruben.

Ben Turpin is the fun producer in "Taking the Count," a one-reel Essanay comedy, followed by "On the Brink of War," the 20th episode of Kalem's "The Girl From 'Frisco," in which Marin Sais and True Boardman have certainly scored a success. Vim supplies a one-reel comedy, "They Practice Economy," featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, in a play dealing with this all important question.

The offerings for Thursday consist of the Selig-Tribune showing pictorially all the big events of the world, together with the very newest of fashions and a one-reel Vim comedy.

"The Dawn of Wisdom," a three-reel Knickerbocker Star Feature drama in which Frank Mayo plays the lead, supported by an all-star cast ushers in Friday's program. Kalem supplies "The Tiger's Claw," the tenth thrilling adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter," in which Ollie Kirkby and George Larkin have the titular roles. Vitagraph offers the first of "The Dangers of Doris" Series under the caption, "A Bit of Bent Wire," featuring Mary Anderson, supported by a strong cast. cast.

The second release of Essanay's series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" under the title, "Dancing With Folly," features Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold and Sydney Ainsworth, who form the triangle of a dramatic and appealing two-reel story. A daring adventure of the "Hazards of Helen" Series, featuring Helen Gibson in "The Vanishing Box Car," will then be shown. Robyn Adair has the stellar role in "The Man He Might Have Been," a one-reel drama from the Selig studios, which shows the pangs of remorse caused by a wasted life.

Converted Stores Bothering Quakers Again

Harrisburg, Pa. Dec. 9.

The Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry, which heretofore has shown leniency in its attitude toward the owners of old buildings which have been converted into motion picture theatres, with relation to the enforcement of the theatre building regulations, has announced its determination to stiffen up its requirement "for the alteration, erection, conversion, or repair of any building now used or to be used as a theatre or motion picture theatre."

Selznick Companies Scattered

Only one of the four stars now working in Lewis J. Selznick productions is in New York at the present time, the rest having sought other corners of the continent.

Herbert Brenon at work on a picturization of "Lucretia Borgia," Victor Hugo's famous drama, to be known as "The Eternal Sin," is now in St. Augustine, Fla., with his entire company headed by Florence Reed. It is judged that nearly a month will be taken to film the exteriors in this southern city.

Clara Kimball Young, her director Charles Giblyn, and what members of the company needed in the exteriors, have gone to New Orleans working on "The Price She Paid." This is an adaption from David Graham Phillips' novel.

Norma Talmadge, having completed "Panthea," has gone to Los Angeles with her husband, Joseph Schenck, on a belated honeymoon. The star's mother and sister as well as many of her friends are located in this center of the industry and the honeymooners plan to stay there until the new year has come

Robert Warwick is the only member of the Selznick forces at work at the studio. Under the direction of Ralph Ince he is well advanced on his production of the detective play, "The Argyle Case." Director Albert Capellani is also in New York working on the adaptation of Miss Young's next picture, "The Easiest Way."

Jap Holdover in 'Frisco

For the second time in its history the Imperial theatre in San Francisco has held a motion picture over on its program for a second week, the honors this time being accorded to the Lasky production, "The Soul of Kura-San" in which Sessue Hayakawa and Myrtle Stedman are starred. So great was the popularity of the picture that Manager John Partington refused to part with it and booked it for the run.

It is interesting to note that the first picture to be held over by the Imperial was also a Lasky on the Paramount Program—Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

Universal Revels in Comics for Last of December

THE Christmas spirit is manifested in the Universal program of the week of December 18. Victor one-act comedy, "It's Great to Be Married," written and produced by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, with Eileen Sedgwick in the leading role, which will be released Friday, December 22, and "Fighting Joe," a two-act Western Christmas drama, written by William Parker, and produced by William V. Mong, which will appear under the Bison brand on Saturday, December 23. William V. Mong, Maud Emory, Harry M. Holden and other players will be seen in "Fighting Joe."

The leading feature of the week is the Red Feather five-act drama, "Mixed Blood," by J. Grubb Alexander, and directed by Charles Swickard. Claire McDowell and Roy Stewart are featured.

"Mixed Blood" will appear on Monday, December 18. On the same day the Nestor one-act comedy, "It Sounded Like a Kiss," written by Bess Meredyth, and produced by Louis Chaudot, will be released. Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons, Priscilla Dean and Vola Smith also appear in this.

The nineteenth episode of the Universal serial, "Liberty," which will appear this week, brings this continued photodrama nearer its end. There will be only one more episode. Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo and Jack Holt are in the cast.

On Tuesday, December 19, the public is offered a special three-act drama, "Little Partner," produced by William Worthington from a scenario by Calder Johnston. The cast is headed by Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon, who are supported by William J. Ran, Clyde Benson, Adele Farrington and Arthur Hoyt. The Victor one-act comedy, "So This Is Paris?" with King Baggot and Leah Baird will appear on the same day.

The Universal Animated Weekly, as usual, comes out on Wednesday. On the same day will appear a two-act L-Ko comedy, "Shooting His Art Out," produced under the direction of David Kirkland with Phil Dunham, Vin Moore, Dick Smith and Margaret Russell in the leading roles. Another release of this date is the Laemmle one-act drama "Homeless," with Matt Moore and Jane Gail.

"The Ivy and the Oak," a two-act society drama under the Rex brand will be released Thursday, December 21. It was written by Alice Saxmar and directed by Donald McDonald. In the cast are Dorothy Davenport, Lee Hill, Clyde Benson, T. D. Crittenden and Lillian Concord. The title has not yet been selected for the Big U drama for the same date.

Besides "It's Great to Be Married," the Imp two-act mystery drama, "In the Dead O'Night," written by Willis Woods and produced by Douglas Gerrard with Mr. Gerrard and Ruth Clifford as the featured players, and the third issue of the Universal Screen Magazine will be released on Friday, December 22.

The Joker comedy "Jags and Jealousy," written by Karl Coolidge and directed by W. W. Beaudine, will appear on Saturday, December 23. Gale Henry and William Franey are starred.

On Sunday, December 24, will appear "Mr. Vampire," a two-act drama under the Rex brand by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. The cast includes Edna Maison, Jack Holt and others. The Powers split-reel "Nervy Nat Has His Fortune Told," an animated comedy cartoon and "The Indian as seen by Dr. Dorsey," an educational, and an Imp one-act drama round out the program.

Western Wardrobe Is Costly

A society debutante could be outfitted for a strenuous season's campaign for the price of one cowboy costume and paraphernalia in the wild-west wardrobe of William S. Hart, the Triangle-Ince star.

In addition there would be quite a tidy sum left over to pay for the debutante's first bunch of orchids and a taxicab, if, perchance, the poor girl had to stand the expense of these luxuries herself.

Although many of the articles in Hart's vaquero war bag have a particular value to him on account of their associations, item for item, their intrinsic worth is enough to make them unattainable for the ordinary cowboy unless he were endowed with rich relatives or other invisible means of support.

Hart's regular "puncher" equipment invoices as follows: Spanish leather, handmade, silver mounted saddle, $400; silver ornamented, selected buckskin chaparejos, $50; silver, gold and jeweled bridle with silver bit, $125; silver and jeweled spurs, $175; Navajo Indian blanket, $125; braided raw-hide lariat, $15; riding boots, $20; tooled leather, silver mounted basket cuffs, $15; sombrero and hand-woven horsehair hat band, $10; tooled leather, silver-studded holster, $10; special made Colt's revolver, $40; gloves, cartridge belt, incidentals, $20; total, $1,005.

This is the price of the articles, figured at manufacturer's cost, by a Los Angeles sporting goods expert. The prospective purchaser of such equestrian finery would need to write his check for a sum considerably in excess of the above figure. Hart has several such outfits and would not consent to part with any of them. He likes a change, he says.

Morosco Stars Join in Bank Robbery

Though each has been a star in his, and her, own right for some time, House Peters and Myrtle Stedman make their first appearance as co-stars in the Morosco photoplay "The Happiness of Three Women," making this a strong release on the Paramount Program. The story which was written by Albert Payson Terhune, involves unwarranted jealousy and the robbery of a bank.

In support of the co-stars there appear L. W. Steers, William Hutchinson, Lucille Ward, Daisy Robinson and Milton Brown. The picture is being directed by William D. Taylor. In the production practically the entire Morosco studio will have to be given over to one setting which shows a long sweeping vista through a reception room, drawing room and conservatory of a fashionable mansion.

Mary to Be Celebrated Guest

Mary Pickford has been invited to be one of the national celebrities at the "Review of National Celebrities" to be given by the Women's Press Club, Pittsburgh, Pa., at a matinee benefit on the afternoon of January 11. The event will take place at the Alvin theatre, the use of which has been given to the club by Harry Davis, proprietor.

Sensuous Appeal in Advertising Film Rebuked

AS a result of the publicity given Otto L. Meister at the Vaudette theater when he ran "Is Any Girl Safe?" for women only and then men only, Milwaukee exhibitors in the future will not be allowed to run pictures for women or men only; neither will they be allowed to display signs stating that children under sixteen cannot be admitted.

This was the decision reached at a meeting of forty exhibitors with the Censor Board in the mayor's office Thursday. It was the exhibitors' own suggestion that this sort of advertising be prohibited. The meeting was a secret one by order of W. E. Hamilton, a member of the Censor Board.

The exhibitors drew up a series of resolutions which they suggested were to be used as a guide for Mayor Hoan in regulating the theatres. It was then suggested that the resolutions be formally adopted and that the mayor be instructed to revoke the license of any theatre owner who violated them after he had been warned. It was also promised by all exhibitors that all advertising shall be truthful and open and not misleading.

A motion that no picture or other advertising having a sensuous appeal shall be shown was voted down on the grounds that such pictures were already taken care of by existing ordinances.

Manufacturer Hires Own Critic

Hugh Hoffman, who has been appointed film critic at Universal City by Vice-President H. O. Davis, has been in the moving picture business almost ten years, beginning as an exhibitor in the days when reels were difficult to obtain.

About seven years ago Hoffman sold his theatre and joined the editorial staff of a motion picture trade paper as cartoonist and interviewer. For a while he was editor of the weekly. Later he became known as a film critic of dependability and devoted much of his time to that work.

Hoffman's cartoon work was set aside and he became a designer of display ads during his spare time. He introduced the hand-drawn display ads now the vogue in film advertising. His first big undertaking along this line was the advertising campaign that ushered in Dante's "Inferno." This was followed by his campaign work for P. A. Powers Picture Plays; Pathe's "Le Miserables," "The Last Days of Pompeii," Paul Rainey's African Hunt and dozens of other small campaigns.

Deposits Unpopular in Minneapolis

A committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of Minneapolis, following a conference with exchange managers, has reported that it is making progress regarding the "deposit" system which has caused so much unrest.

The committee has not announced the details but expects to report before the close of the year.

Lee Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, who stopped in Minneapolis on his tour of the country, advocated an open fight and urged the corporation to use the boycott if necessary to win out but this method will not be used.

R. G. MARSHALL.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

THE great demand for vessels of all descriptions by shipping interests is proving a worry to John B. O'Brien, director for the Thanhouser Film Corporation, who requires an old ship for sinking purpurposes in Lloyd Lonergan's latest photodrama, "Mary Lawson's Secret," in which Charlotte Walker is to star.

MR. O'BRIEN and Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, have searched the shores of Long Island, where formerly many a deserted hulk made its final berth, but everything that can float is carrying ammunitions to the Allies.

"It's tough to have to bid against frenzied financiers," said Mr. O'Brien. "Oh, this high cost of producing!"

WORK is progressing rapidly at the Thanhouser studios on the "Vicar of Wakefield," which will be Frederick Warde's next starring vehicle following Shakespeare's "King Lear." Mr. Warde's son, Ernest Warde, is directing.

A huge prison scene is now being erected in the studios for the taking of the last incidents in the Vicar's life, so well known to the many admirers of Goldsmith's famous story. Several hundred extra people and twenty added character actors will be used in making this scene.

MR. WARDE will be supported in the "Vicar of Wakefield" by Carey Hastings as Mrs. Primrose, the Vicar's wife; Boyd Marshall as George Primrose; Kathryn Adams as Olivia Primrose; Gladys Leslie as Sophia Primrose; William Parke, Jr., as Moses Primrose; Tula Belle and Barbara Howard as Dick and Bill, the Primrose children; Thomas A. Curran as Mr. Burchell; Robert Vaughn as Squire Thornhill; Grace De Carlton as Arabella Wilmot; Arthur Bauer as Mr. Wilmot; and Morgan Jones as Jenkinson.

FREDERIC SULLIVAN is directing a new society-art-atmosphere story at the studio of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. Supporting Florence La Badie in the cast will be Boyd Marshall, Ethyle Cooke, Henri Leone, specially engaged to take the part of a French teacher of painting.

Gladys Hulette is about to start on the first scenes of Thanhouser's latest story in Miss Hulette's "lovely child series," under the direction of Eugene Moore. The name of the comedy-drama is to be "Peggy o' the Pots and Pans," definitely changed from "Kate o' the Kitchen." Agnes C. Johnston is again the authoress of Miss Hulette's play, she also having written "'Her' New York," "The Shine Girl," "Prudence, the Pirate," and other successful vehicles of Miss Hulette's.

THANHOUSER FILM CORPORATION has engaged Grace Henderson for grande dame parts. Miss Henderson is an actress of national reputation, having played with the Frohmans and other leading producers. She is the widow of David Henderson, the late producer of Chicago, who established Eddie Foy in the starry firmament and also brought out many huge extravaganzas.

EUGENE MOORE is directing a Thanhouser picture, in which a complete house—roofless, of course—is set on the big Thanhouser stage at the New Rochelle studios. Kitchen, dining-room, parlor, library and drawing-room, with outlooks on verandas and garden plots, are all in position. No backing is, therefore, required, and the characters move naturally from room to room without any mix-up in the entrances and exits.

CLAY CARROLL, a late addition to Thanhouser forces, is a Southern beauty, and gives promise of doing some fine work in support of Florence La Badie in a new picture now in the process of making. Frederic Sullivan, Thanhouser director, is quite enthusiastic over Miss Carroll's first work. Her film experience, up until the Thanhouser engagement, had included two "larks" as an extra girl—and then the fever gripped her.

FLORENCE LA BADIE, the Thanhouser star, has nearly completed "The Girl Who Wanted to Live," Philip Lonergan's play, directed by Frederic Sullivan. Miss La Badie in this drama portrays a girl who comes out of prison to fight the world for the things she believes are hers.

PAULINE FREDERICK, Thomas Meigham, her leading man, and the rest of "The Slave Market" company have returned from a four weeks' stay in Cuba, where the Famous Players adaptation of Frederic Arnold Kumner's play, "The Slave Market," has been staged. As the entire action of the story takes place in Spain and the West Indies, the choice of Cuba as the setting of this forthcoming Paramount picture is ideal. The picture, by the way, is the first Famous Players production in which Thomas Meigham has appeared since his arrival from the Pacific Coast.

NO one in New York has been a more constant motion picture fan during the past month than George M. Cohan, who is starring this week in a film version of his own play, "Broadway Jones," under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille. Mr. Cohan has been attending picture theatres afternoons and evenings for several weeks in order to get thoroughly saturated with the new field. He will himself write the titles and the scenario for the pictures, which will be distributed by the Artcraft Picture Corporation.

GREAT excitement prevailed at the Mary Pickford studio recently when George Cohan visited the Fort Lee film plant to learn some of the fine points of motion picture producing. Everyone was prepared to give the Yankee Doodle boy from Broadway a grand reception, and this caused enough excitement in itself, but the incident that almost put the studio in a state of panic shortly after Mr. Cohan arrived was a fight between two of the players in the new Pickford-Artcraft picture, "The Pride of the Clan."

The combatants did not waste much time arguing, but tackled each other with a will, resulting in many bruises and scratches before they could be pulled apart by Mr. Cohan himself. The combatants in question were Hulda, the duck who swam all the way from Chicago to New York in the basin of a Pullman compartment to appear in "The Pride of the Clan," and Mamie, the cat, who also appears in the Pickford-Artcraft film.

Jacksonville Studios Getting into the Winter Stride

Special to Motion Picture News.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 5.

At the second meeting of the Jacksonville Screen Club with two hundred members present the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Storm Boyd, manager Kalem studio, president; Louis Burstein, managing Vim studio, first vice-president; Harry C. Myers, star of the Myers-Thelby Vim Comedies de Luxe, second vice-president; J. R. Barton, manager of the Universal Exchange, treasurer, and D. Joyce Milberry of the Motion Picture Exchange, secretary.

Addresses were made by Mayor J. E. T. Bowden of the city of Jacksonville; W. R. Carter, editor of the Florida Metropolis; E. T. Hollingsworth, Jr., motion picture editor of the Florida Metropolis; Walter R. Early, advertising representative of the New York Morning Telegraph. The following were made honorary members of the club; Mayor J. E. T. Bowden, W. R. Carter, E. T. Hollingsworth, Jr., Walter R. Early, President F. C. Groover of the Chamber of Commerce; Secretary G. E. Leonard of the Chamber of Commerce, and B. R. Kessler, secretary of the Advertisers' Club.

Fifty prominent business men of the city took out associate membership at $50 each, in order to put the club on a business footing at once. Temporary quarters have been secured at the Hotel Mason.

Walter (Fatty) Hiers, former member of the Thanhouser Company in Jacksonville, and now with the Famous Players is spending a few days in the Orange Blossom City between pictures.

The Thanhouser Players are due to sail for Jacksonville as soon as Ernest Warde completes his present production the "Vicar of Wakefield." In a letter to the representative of the News in Jacksonville, W. Ray Johnston of the Thanhouser Company states that the entire four companies are longing for the balmy air of the Southland.

Babe Hardy and Kate Price, the Vim stars, are now working on a production rather unique, being something on the order of "Old Wives for New." Babe is directing as well as taking the stellar role.

Gale Welcome to Boys on Governor's Island

Margaret Gale, who is featured in "The Yellow Menace," is going over to Governor's Island Sunday and entertain the soldiers and sailors there with a presentation of two episodes of "The Yellow Menace" and "How Molly Made Good," in which picture she was the star.

Miss Gale will tell the soldiers and sailors something about her work in the movies. In the event Uncle Sam's boys like "The Yellow Menace" well enough, Miss Gale has promised to see that they get a chance to look at the remaining episodes.

The entertainment has been arranged through the courtesy of Lieut. Griffin, who is chaplain on Governor's Island, and the Unity Service Corporation.

Sinful Series Backed by Merit and Heavy Advertising

McCLURE Pictures announces that the first of "The Seven Deadly Sins," a series of five-reel features, will be released by Superpictures, Inc., through the Triangle exchanges on Monday, January 8.

Ann Murdock in "Envy," supported by Shirley Mason and George Le Guere, will be the first. The other six will follow at weekly intervals.

Each drama in the series will be a complete photoplay. "The Seven Sins" will be connected by the love story of Eve Leslie (Shirley Mason) and Adam Moore (George Le Guere). In each Eve is tempted by one of the seven sins. In each one she comes out triumphant.

The fiction story by Florence Morse Kingsley, author of "Titus—A Comrade of the Cross," is now appearing in The Ladies' World, which has a circulation of more than a million copies each month. The campaign of advertising in national magazines already has started in twenty-five national magazines that reach a total of more than forty-five million readers.

Special campaigns will be carried on in the cities by display advertising in the largest daily newspapers, reaching at least ten million readers.

"The Seven Deadly Sins" is a moving picture proposition entirely new, launched by the same interests that conceived and produced the first serial, "What Happened to Mary."

Following Ann Murdock in "Envy," Holbrook Blinn in "Pride" will be released on Monday, January 15; Shirley Mason in "Passion," on January 22; H. B. Warner in "Wrath," on January 29; Nance O'Neil in Greed," on February 5; Charlotte Walker in "Sloth," on February 12; George Le Guere in "The Seventh Sin," on February 19.

Richard Ridgely directed "Envy" and "Pride." Theodore Marston was the director-producer of the other five.

Edwin Thanhouser's Ambitious Plans for Coming Year

HAVING completed all the features that are to be released in 1916 through the Pathe exchanges, Edwin Thanhouser has laid plans for the year 1917.

Florence La Badie in "Divorce and the Daughter" and Frederick Warde in "King Lear" are Thanhouser-Pathe December releases.

Mr. Thanhouser has contracted to release two five-reel features a month through Pathe and twenty-four releases during the coming year.

January will see Gladys Hulette in "Her New York," and Valkyrien in "The Image Maker." The former is by Agnes C. Johnston.

"The Image Maker" is a story of reincarnation. Eugene Moore is the director. Harris Gordon is the leading man.

Doris Grey and Wayne Arey in "Her Beloved Enemy," from a story by Lloyd Lonergan, will serve to introduce these two stars to the Pathe program. Ernest Warde directed the play.

Mr. Lonergan also is the author of "A Modern Monte Cristo," in which Vincent Serrano is starred. Florence La Badie is just finishing "The Girl Who Wanted to Live," a story of prison reform, by Philip Lonergan, and within a few weeks will begin upon another play by Miss Johnston.

Charlotte Walker is now engaged in making "Mary Lawson's Secret," from a scenario by Lloyd Lonergan. John B. O'Brien is directing Miss Walker.

Frederick Warde is now engaged under the direction of Ernest Warde, his son, in producing a film version of "The Vicar of Wakefield."

Mr. Warde will take many months in the making and the incident of the green spectacles, remembered by every reader of "The Vicar," as well as the tragedy of the burning of the vicar's home will be related in the photoplay.

Dangerous for Doris

The first release of "The Dangers of Doris," a series of ten single reels of romance and adventure, produced by The Broadway Star Feature Company is entitled "A Bit of Bent Wire," and will be released on Friday, December 22 on the General Film Program.

The role of Doris will be portrayed by "Sunshine," Mary Anderson, and each adventure will be a complete story.

Doris through the aid of "A Bit of Bent Wire" helps a young clubman to start his automobile and her career of romance and thrilling adventures.

The story was written by A. Van Buren Powell and produced under the direction of David Smith.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. Jessen

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Dec. 6.

WHARTON, INC., began production at their Los Angeles studio on the site of the original Universal City, north of Hollywood, last week when the "Patria" serial company producing the international patriotic film arrived in Los Angeles. The company left the Ithaca studio, Monday, November 27, and were in Los Angeles ready to go to work the next Saturday.

The producing company which came to the coast is headed by Mrs. Vernon Castle and her mother Mrs. Foote, Elizabeth Emrick, Milton Sills, Warner Owen, M. W. Rayo, F. W. Stewart; Producer Leopold Wharton and others. The company made the tour across the continent in a special car provided by the Pullman Company, with stop only at Chicago for a few hours.

THEODORE WHARTON came to the coast more than a week ago, and Louis Joseph Vance, the author, has been here several weeks working with Jacques Jaccard, producer of the "Liberty" serial for the Universal, who had been engaged previously to direct the five remaining episodes of "Patria." Preparations for completing the serial had been so carefully made that there was no loss of time. Everything was in readiness to resume work just where they had ceased production in the East.

Marie Walcamp, who was featured in the name part of the Universal "Liberty" serial, has been engaged to play an important part in the remaining episodes, that of a western ranch girl. The role is of a semi-heavy character.

SCENARIO EDITOR E. B. LEWIS in association with Mrs. E. M. Ingleton has reorganized the scenario department at Universal City, to make possible the carrying out of the new policy recently inaugurated. This provides that the staff writers will supply all one, two and three-reel subjects, and only exceptional five reel stories or scenarios will be considered from outsiders. The reading staff has been almost wholly eliminated, the only one remaining being Earl Hewitt, who has served in this capacity for more than two years. Other writers are William Parker, Fred Myton, Jack Cunningham, Bess Meredyth, E. J. Clawson, C. J. Wilson, Jr., Maie Havey, Roy Coolidge, Chester B. Clapp, and George Bronson Howard who is also directing. This is the largest scenario department of any studio.

JACK MULHALL, who has been with the Universal since the closing of the Los Angeles studio of the Biograph Company almost a year ago, has been placed under a two year contract, and is to be starred in five-reel productions, the first of which is titled "The Killer." The making of this has been entrusted to Raymond Wells, who is the author of the story, and with Fred Myton, prepared the scenario. Mulhall takes the part of a young man who becomes a gangster in New York. The play takes Mulhall from a good family, shows his introduction by misfortune into the ring of gangsters, and then his "advancement" to leadership. Ultimately he is the one to take the life of the district attorney. At the attorney's home when ready to make the final shot, he is accosted by the little daughter of the attorney, and seeing the happy home he is about to wreck, he becomes a traitor to his fellow gangsters. Supporting Mulhall are Frank Whitson, Grace McLean, little Virginia Lee and others.

VIOLET MacMILLON, formerly with the Universal who for the past year has been in vaudeville on the Keith circuits, has returned to the coast to play in a series of four or five, one and two-reel subjects. Parts from these are then to be used by her in her vaudeville act titled "In and Out of the Movies." In the first subject to be made, "The Wishing Slipper," she appears as an eight year old girl; miss of eighteen; and then as a woman of eighty. Director George Cochrane is in charge of filming this series. The Polly-Ooley stories which ran in a well-known magazine, have been adapted for the screen by E. J. Clawson and Jack Conway will film a five-reel photoplay with Ella Hall, George Wells, James McCandless, Bob Worthington and Gretchen Lederer.

LOIS WEBER has a very unusual number of Universal stars cast for her next production titled "Even As You and I." This scenario is by Willis-Woods, and many of the scenes are of an allegorical nature. A number are laid in the studios of an artist and sculptor. Ben Wilson and Mignon Anderson have the leads, and the supporting players include Maude George, Bertram Grassby, E. N. Wallock and a number of others. Ruth Stonehouse has again been placed in charge of directing her own company which will make one-reel subject written by herself. She is now taking the part of a boy in "Red Dick the Good-Hearted Gun-Man."

DOUGLAS GERRARD this week directed and played opposite the leading woman of the first motion picture he ever saw. She is Claire McDowell, and the subjest made is a three-reel photoplay titled "The Coming of Jessica."

Henry McRay will complete the filming of the twentieth episode of "Liberty, A Daughter of the U. S. A." serial. The happy climax for the picture is laid in Washington, D. C., and a handsome setting prepared shows the interior of the Red-room of the Whitehouse. Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt, Eddie Polo and Neal Hart played in all episodes of this serial. In addition to keeping up with the releases of the serial since taking charge of its production, McRae made a 2,000 foot photoplay titled "The Pilot of Death" using the Santa Monica road races for atmosphere. The decision of the officials that Mr. McRae make this subject was made the morning of the races. He hurriedly prepared a few lead pencil notations from a story handed him, and made the entire 2,000 feet without a scenario.

DIRECTOR JOSEPH DE GRASSE is filming the five-reel subject "The Girl in the Checkered Coat" from a scenario prepared by Ida May Parks. Dorothy Phillips, who has been under De Grasse's direction for several months, with Lon

Variety Predominates in Universal Pictures

Chaney, plays the featured lead, supported by Jane Bernoudy, William Stoll and others. William V. Mong has Claire McDowell and little Zoe Ray for principals of the one-reel subject he is now making. It is titled "Ransom." Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are the featured leads in "His Wife's Relations," a Nestor comedy Louis Chaudet is directing. Edith Robert and Fred Gamble take important parts. Allen Curtis is busy with the filming of "The Fickle Blacksmith" in one-reel, and W. W. Beaudine is directing "The Substitute Minister," a Joker comedy, written by Jack Cunningham.

HARRY CAREY continues under the direction of Fred A. Kelsey and a two-reel photoplay "His Way," is being filmed. The Universal cowboys furnish a number of thrills, and Carey is supported by Claire DuBray, Wm. Gettinger and Vester Peg.

Production of the five-reel comedy drama, "Face Value," which features Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon, has been delayed because of an accident which befell Miss Vernon. She was thrown from an automobile when it was going at a rapid rate of speed, and although not seriously injured, suffered a nervous shock which made her appearance at the studio impossible.

WEDGEWOOD NOWELL is playing the featured part in a five-reel photoplay being made at U City. It is titled "Humanity." A cast which includes Millard K. Wilson, Nicholas Duneaw, Gypsy Hart and Dorothy Barrett, have been selected to support Nowell. A one-reel photoplay is being filmed by Allen Holubar with Roberta Wilson playing poposite him. It is titled "The Young King." A one-reel western drama, "Opportunity and Optimo," adapted from a story by Charles Van Loan, is being filmed by Director George Marshall. He has L. M. Wells, George Burrill, and Leo Pearson as the principals.

THE most recent Keystone subject to be finished has been titled "The Lost Baby," which was made by Director Clarence Badger and supervised by Mack Sennett. It is a melodramatic comedy in which the villain falls heir to his just deserts in the last one hundred feet. By the will of an eccentric uncle, a young fellow is left a fortune provided he does not become a father until of a certain age. Another heir, learning of this, places a baby in the young man's home, and attempts to prove the youth is the father in order to secure a portion of the estate, and win a fair one the young man is engaged to wed. Bobbie Vernon, Gloria Swanson, Earle Rodney, Ed. Kennedy, Clarry (correct) Lyndon, Sylvia Ashton and Helen Bray are implicated. This comedy is a little off the Keystone color, as it is more of the nature of a light comedy than slap-stick, and contains considerable dramatic interest. A notable feature is the work performed by a big Dane dog. One of his acts is to enter the basement of a building where a child is floating about in a cradle and push the cradle to the stariway, lift the baby out and carry it to safety. The less than one hundred feet needed for these scenes required many days of effort with this well-trained dog.

The Men Who Make Cub Comedies and Some of the Stars

MACK SENNETT caused to be erected on the corner near the Keystone studio, a city business block with suitable space for a ladies' smart furnishing store where a cut-price sale riot was filmed for a comedy being made by Director Harry Williams. The millinery bargains placed in the window were said to be so alluring that a number of women of the vicinity attempted to make purchases until they saw the familiar face of Chester Conklin as "Mr. Walrus" in the background. Fred Mace, who has been with the Keystone Company for the past year and a half, has left that organization, and it is reported will return to the legitimate stage.

THE Morosco production starring Kathlyn Williams was delayed this week because of the illness of the star. Saturday she insisted upon working at the studio when ill because about two hundred extra people had been engaged for scenes to be made that day. The exposure brought on a relapse, and for several days it was thought she was suffering with pneumonia. The Pallas production starring George Beban, "His Sweetheart," has been completed, and the star is now taking a two weeks' vacation while a new play is being prepared for him. The department of publicity at the Morosco-Pallas studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been discontinued, and Kenneth McGaffey, heretofore in charge of publicity at the Lasky studio, will look after publicity matters for both producing plants.

William S. Hart, Star of Triangle-Ince Pictures

MEMBERS of the Yorke-Metro Company will, in all probability, go to Truckee, Cal., to secure Northwest scenes for the subject now being produced by Director Jay Hunt. This is "The Promise," adapted from the novel by H. D. Hendrix, and co-stars, Harold Lockwood and May Allison. There is more than four feet of snow in the vicinity of Truckee at this time. A number of types have been engaged for the production. Paul Willis, a boy actor, will have an important part, that of a brother to Miss Allison, in the play. The subject requires a number of settings showing interiors of a wealthy New York residence, and these are now being built at the studio.

THE tenth episode of the Mutual-Signal serial, "A Lass of the Lumberlands," will contain features never photographed before. These consist of scenes showing a running fight on board a train of flat and box-cars at night. Two gangs of men taking part in the melee carried torches, and these later set fire to the train while it is traveling at a high rate of speed. Long distance shots of the train give it the appearance of a comet. Upon the completion of this episode, the entire company will go to El Portal, Cal., for snow scenes, and upon their return will make a trip to Las Vegas, Nev., for mining episodes. Although it will require more than six weeks to complete the serial, Director J. P. McGowan is making plans for future productions. Another Helen Holmes series of five-reel features will be made for which book rights are now being acquired.

ALICE McGOWAN, author of "Judith of the Cumberlands," and Grace McGowan-Cook, her sister, spent a day this week as guests of Helen Holmes, who played the name-part in the Signal production of the above-named book. Orrin Denny, superintendent of the Signal laboratories, this week made application for patent on a labor-saving device, which will hold film racks in developing tanks. The new device is now in use at the Signal laboratories, and gives perfect satisfaction. Ford I. Beebe, Signal publicity director, responsible for the many magazine stories concerning Helen Holmes and J. P.

McGowan railroad films, was the center of volleys of congratulations this week. Beebe explains the demonstration in a brief sentence: "It's a girl."

THE reconstruction plans of the Lasky studio provide for dressing-rooms for stock players of the organization above the new scene-docks. The floor of the dressing-rooms are on a level with the roof of the new inclosed studio, and give the players a view of the entire grounds. A new concrete building has been erected between stages two and three, which will be used as an electrical station. In this, all transformers and other lighting equipment necessary for the plant will be used. The equipment of this represents an outlay of more than seven thousand dollars. Director Edward J. Le Saint and company of Lasky players, including Wallace Reid and Anita King, have gone to Bear Lake Valley to make the exteriors for a new production Le Saint took up this week. This is decidedly Western.

THE Lasky Players have organized a dramatic club, and will rehearse a number of playlets and scenes from standard plays to give at charity performances. Practically all members of the Lasky Stock Company have signified their intention of taking an active part in this work, and have delegated William C. de Mille to write a Christmas play for them. The first public appearance will be at the Elks entertainment December 8, the program for which is in charge of Director George Melford. A few days later the Lasky Players will take part in a benefit given to raise funds for a Hollywood company of coast artillery reserves.

THE Lasky Leader will make its initial bow about holiday time from the subtitle Press on Lasky lane, according to rumors to be heard at the famous players' rialto. Kenneth McGaffey is the name that is to be hung at the top of the editorial page, he being the old managing editor. George Proctor will be the o-old copy reader, Tom Gerrity the o-o-old re-write man, Charles Sarver the o-o-o-old reporter, Harvey Thew the o-o-o-o-old city editor, and Wm. de Mille the dramatic critic. Milton Hoffman will add "pep" to the staff by virtue of his position as business manager with efficiency ideas. The publication promises to be in two colors—black on white—at least for the first issue. Promoters fear it will be possible to print it in red later, if the editorial staff carry out plans now made.

THE Lasky scenario staff has been increased by the addition of Jerre Looney, who arrived at the studios from New York this week. Cecil B. de Mille departed Saturday for New York to personally supervise the initial presentation of his latest Geraldine Farrar production, "Joan of Arc," which will be given about the first of the year. Director Frank Reicher has taken up the filming of a photoplay written jointly by Mrs. Beatrice de Mille and Leighton Osman. Marie Doro has been selected as star.

MEMBERS of the Lone Star Chaplin Stock Company have had a few days' vacation while the scenario staff and Mr. Chaplin have been working out a story for the next subject. There is some talk at the studio that the entire producing organization will make a trip to Honolulu, and film a comedy while en route, during the week of the boat's stay in the Hawaaian waters. If the cloudy weather continues at Los Angeles, this program will be carried out. The Robin Williamson Vogue Company is making a melodramatic farce. Ben Turpin takes the role of a violinist, who is madly in love with one of his pupils, who is driven from her home by an angry mother, who wishes her daughter to marry a supposed count, who is janitor at a cheap show at the beach. The count is exposed when the mother's purse, thought to have been lost, was found on his person. Hugh Saxon, author of the story, has introduced into this a number of new gags. One is a chase over the tops of circus tents. Another provides for exposure of methods employed by get-the-dime shows at beach resorts. Margaret Templeton is the mother, Gypsy Abbott the daughter, Paddy McQuire takes the part of the tattooed boy, and Ed. Sedgwick and Larry Bowes are rival showmen.

AL. E. CHRISTIE is trying out a new plan which bids fair to greatly aid the Christie Company in all departments. The innovation consists of conferences in which all members take part. These are held at times when it is impossible to photograph because of light conditions, and have resulted in all players taking a keen interest in the business. At conferences already held, stories have been discussed, scenarios rebuilt, advertising copy planned, and publicity stories and theatre advertising suggested.

Prizes for ad copy designs have been given to Neal Burns and Harry Ham. Eddie Barry has proven himself an originator of gags for comedies.

Keen Humor in Keen Cartoons

The first picture to be released by the Keen Cartoon Corporation, through Independent Exchanges, is "Henry W. Zippy Buys a Pet Pup," which is scheduled for December 18.

It depicts the trials and tribulations which Henry experiences in his desire to get a little pet to allay his lonesomeness while his wife is away.

The second release, "Mose Shakes the Rheumatism" introduces to us a superstitious, rheumatic, old darky, who, having fallen asleep in the park, has his slumbers disturbed by the squawking of some chickens as a truckload passes on the way to market. He dreams that he is just going to eat a meal of chicken when he wakes, looks all around and decides that there must be spirits about him.

In the third release, "Jeb Jenkins, The Village Genius," is up against it to raise the interest on Squire Skinflint's mortgage.

The fourth release, "The Old Forty-Niner," takes us to the picturesque and artistic environment of the great West, and shows the adventures of Pop, a prospector who, in seeking a gold mine, is handicapped by a balky burro.

The fifth picture to be released is "Easy Money; Jerry McDub Collects Some Accident Insurance."

In the sixth release, "Dr. Zippy Opens a Sanatorium," the important matter of health is taken up in detail.

Henry W. Zippy has a peculiar equipment for his sanatorium, but full credit must be given him for the cures he effects.

Not only does U. Arthur Victum regain his agility, but Footintha Grave reaches, under Dr. Zippy's careful handling, the very pink of condition from the very punk of condition.

New Company Goes West

Work on the first production of the Anchor Film corporation, "Hell Hath No Fury," is now under way under the direction of Charles Earl Bartlett. Mr. Bartlett is now located at the Signal studio in Los Angeles. He took with him Grace Davison, who is to star in the picture, and Lawrence Hayes, personal representative of James A. Stiles, general manager of the Anchor Films. Other than the star the cast has not yet been decided upon.

The picture will be offered to the trade through the states rights market as a six-reel feature. As soon as Director Bartlett has completed "Hell Hath No Fury—" he will take up the work of producing the second release entitled "The Last Hour," another story from the pen of Mr. Stiles.

Explosive Episode Entertains

The fourteenth episode of Unity's "Yellow Menace" is released the week of December 10, under the title of "The Interrupted Nuptials." This has to do with Ali Singh's efforts to gain the formula of a high explosive in possession of the secret service men. A bomb is placed in their house, but it is discovered at the last moment. This and a thriller brought on by the lassoing and dragging of a character from his bedroom window furnish plenty of suspense.

Close Year with Kalem Serial Thrillers and Ham Comics

ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE, author of Kalem's series success, "The Girl from 'Frisco," has taken a timely theme for "On the Brink of War." The Mexican labor situation in California, and the clashes between natives and Mexicans, especially in the ranching sections of Southern California, form the basis of the two-reel story.

"On the Brink of War" finds Marin Sais aiding the campaign of True Boardman, playing Congressman John Wallace, for reelection on a platform demanding the exclusion of Mexicans Others seen in the production are Hart Hoxie, Edward Clisbee, Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury, and Jack Rahm. This episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco" is released Wednesday, December 20.

Other Kalem releases bringing the General Film schedule up to the opening of the new year offer an unusual variety of subjects. The comedy element of the program is well taken care of by the "Ham Comedies." Subjects already scheduled are: "The Fatal Violin," released Tuesday, December 19; "The Quest of the Golden Goat," December 26, and "That Terrible Tenderfoot," for Tuesday, January 2.

For audiences that demand a share of sensational thrills the "Grant, Police Reporter" and "Hazards of Helen" series offer their weekly breath-taking exploits. "The Tiger's Claws," on Friday, December 22, and "A Mission of State" on Friday, December 29, are two of the "Grant" one-reel episodes listed.

"The Vanishing Box-car" and "A Race with Death" are the two "Hazards of Helen" episodes scheduled to ring the old year out.

Script Writing Experts Bred by Film Publicity

"ONE of the best features ever offered to a newspaper in connection with motion pictures," is the way the publisher of one of the biggest newspapers in the United States describes the series of lessons in scenario writing prepared by Pathe in connection with "The Shielding Shadow." These scenario lessons by George B. Seitz, author of the photoplay, were published in more than two hundred of the leading newspapers throughout the country.

Harry L. Reichenbach

"There is scarcely a man, woman or child who goes to motion pictures who has not at some time tried to write or imagined he would like to write a story for the pictures," says J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange. "It was this universal interest in the art of photoplay writing that was responsible for the big success of our plan."

The scenario lessons as presented in the newspapers were condensed from the real working scenarios from which the Astra Film Corporation produced "The Shielding Shadow" serial. The technical phrases were retained and at the end of each week was published a technical dictionary. In introductory notes the newspapers encouraged their readers to first study the scenarios, then see the play presented on the screen and go home and try to write their own scenarios. Many scenarios were submitted in response to this invitation. A number of the newspapers publishing these scenarios have started scenario contests of their own offering cash prizes for the best scenario submitted for the final episode of "The Shielding Shadow."

Russian Steps in World Film

The World Film play upon which Alice Brady is working at present is called "The Snowbird," and its heroine is a Russian dancer. In this drama Miss Brady is to execute two ambitious Russian dances with Alexis Kosloff, and for the past month she has been devoting two hours of each day to taking strenuous lessons in the art of Terpsichore a la Russe.

Special Paper for Sothern's Third Vitagraph

Manager W. W. Irwin of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, has arranged for a special twenty-four sheet paper on "The Man of Mystery," E. H. Sothern's third Vitagraph photodrama. These large billboard sheets are in addition, of course, to the usual half-sheet cards, ones, threes, and sixes.

All of this paper was shipped to the various exchanges more than a month in advance of the release. Thus an exhibitor was enabled not only to see the picture itself but also to see all the available paper and arrange his advertising campaign accordingly.

The release date has been advanced to January. Originally it had been planned to release this Sothern feature on January 8. "The Man of Mystery," featuring Mr. Sothern and a more than notable supporting cast.

Famous Melo Screened

"The Ninety and Nine," famous old play of the spoken stage, has been transferred to the screen by Greater Vitagraph under the personal supervision of J. Stuart Blackton, and will be released through Vitagraph V-L-S-E exchanges on December 25.

William Courtleigh, long under the stage management of Charles Frohman and Oliver Morosco, appears in the part of Tom Silverton, drunkard and ne'er-do-well.

Lucille Lee Stewart plays opposite Mr. Courtleigh as Ruth.

The adaptation of "The Ninety and Nine" for the screen was made by E. J. Montague, and is in five reels. Its release on Christmas day brings it between Alice Joyce's newest picture, "Whom the Gods Destroy," released on December 18, and E. H. Sothern's third Vitagraph picture, "The Man of Mystery," released on New Year's day.

Ethel Clayton-World-Brady Picture Renamed

The title of the World-Brady picture play, "A Law Unto Herself," has been changed to "The Bondage of Fear." This is the drama in which Ethel Clayton is starred, with Rockcliffe Fellowes, Arthur Ashley and John Bowers playing the important men roles.

Exceptional Circumstances Surround Serial Release

Big and Little Theatres Book This One and Amaze Home Office Heads

PATHE lays claim to having produced the first feature-serial in "Pearl of the Army." This because of the fact that it is being booked in houses and on high priced circuits where a serial never was used before. Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo, one of the most important first run houses in the country is showing it; the William Fox circuit in New York, Newark, New Britain and Springfield, Mass., has it booked; the Rialto in San Francisco is showing it seven days a week; and Loew's St. James in Boston is playing it up big.

Many exhibitors who have booked "Pearl of the Army" are playing it over and above their regular five-reel feature. It is the feature of the bill—the five-reelers come afterwards. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe exchange has this to say about "Pearl of the Army":

"Of course a serial cannot be judged from the viewpoint of the so-called feature. A serial is a distinctive feature in itself. A serial is just as distinctive a part of the program as the news reel, the educationals, the cartoons, etc.

"In the past, we have heard big exhibitors complain that serials were not up to their standard. But this is not the case now. Pathe's serials meet all the requirements of a feature. They have an all-star cast, strong stories by prominent authors and direction and sets up to the standard of the best features on the market. In addition, a serial has a powerful attraction that a feature lacks—a continued interest that brings audiences back for fifteen weeks."

Special interest centers on the announcement that the William Fox circuit has booked the serial. This is the first time that any serial has been shown over this circuit.

Another point is the advance booking reports that the home office is receiving from all parts of the country. Serial records have been broken, the high water mark set by "The Shielding Shadow" having been passed some time ago.

Critics of the trade and daily press have been unanimous in proclaiming the merits of the serial.

"Captain Jinks" Shifted

The release date of the Frank Daniels-Vitagraph comedy of January 22 has been postponed and in its place Commodore Blackton has put "Captain Jinks' Baby," which is also one of the famous Jinks series in which Mr. Daniels has delighted America. The original release for January 22, "Captain Jinks' Nephew's Wife," will be seen a little later than had been expected.

Frank Powell to Have More Room for Work

An enlargement of the studio facilities of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation to conform with the enlarged scope of the organization since John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has become its presiding head, and Mr. Powell, vice-president and director general, is announced by Mr. Freuler.

The principal studio of the Powell Corporation will be at College Point, L. I. Mr. Powell has leased for a long term with a purchase option, the fourteen acres of ground formerly comprised in Donnelly's Grove and Pavilions. The ground and buildings are on the waterfront. The studio building proper has a working floor space of 16,000 square feet, and it will be the largest building devoted exclusively to picture making anywhere in the vicinity of New York. There are twenty or more smaller buildings on the place, which will be used as printing and developing plants.

Miss O'Neil and Miss Rambeau are rehearsing on Long Island in Mrs. Gertrude Atherton's "Mrs. Balfame" and Algernon Boysesen's "The Greater Woman," respectively.

Boy Artiste with Lockwood

Among the first engaged to support Harold Lackwood and May Allison in the Yorke picturization of James B. Hendryx's novel, "The Promise," is Paul Willis, who is well known in the profession as the result of his recent performance in "The Fall of the Nation." He created the part of the younger brother in the Dixon spectacle and previous to that he was featured in a series of two-reel Majestic and Reliance juvenile releases with Mildred Harris and has also appeared with Douglas Fairbanks and Normal Talmadge in Triangle-Fine Arts pictures. Paul has just passed his sixteenth birthday.

"Lure of Gold" Another Serial

The Ess-Ess Producing Company will, with the first of the new year start production on its fifteen-episode serial, "The Lure of Gold." A cast of well-known players, including Darwin Karr, Art Acord and Ruth Blair will be featured. The company will work in a studio located at 517 West 54th Street, New York City. Publicity and distributing arrangements have already been commenced.

Salt Lake Showmen Suffer from Belated Moral Wave

Salt Lake City, Utah, Dec. 5.

WITH an energetic evangelist of the Billy Sunday type plus a good press agent scoring motion pictures, the women's clubs and one evening paper falling into line; this week has seen the Chief of Police given arbitrary powers to censor motion pictures in Salt Lake. An ordinance also has been drawn up and passed the first reading. It is proposed to make the showing of alleged salacious pictures a misdemeanor with a fine of $299 or six months in jail, or both.

The trouble started in the usual way. The Orpheum theatre in Salt Lake this season cut down its big time shows to four days. The other three days were devoted to motion pictures. After booking "Purity" the management put out a lot of "attractive paper" and played up the nude in the form of newspaper cuts. On the Saturday night prior to the Sunday opening an evangelist opened fire in his tabernacle and his press agent saw that each of the three Sunday morning papers got a solid column of red-hot stuff.

When "Purity" opened that afternoon the 2,000 seats at 25 and 50 cents were stampeded, and for the ensuing three days the house played to capacity audiences.

The W. H. Swanson houses, the American, Liberty, and Rex, got into the game, too, with "A Fool There Was," "Sin," and another similar picture, while the Paramount-Empress came in with another bedroom drama, Marguerite Clark in "Miss George Washington," a good rollicking farce to which some super-sensitive church people took umbrage.

And now the fat is in the fire!

With no organization among the exhibitors of Utah or the film men generally, with a brand new and ambitious legislature going into session in six weeks, the women's clubs stirred up and the evangelist working overtime, things do not carry a roseate aspect for the industry in the Beehive State. GEO. E. CARPENTER.

Long Bookings Practicable

"Bought and Paid For," a World-Brady picture of recent issue, has been shown for a week at a time in dozens of theatres where one day was previously the limit and has drawn crowds in all instances, showing that the daily change plan is by no means unassailable.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Michigan Exchangemen Go East

The following changes in the management of Detroit exchanges have taken place:

George J. DeButte succeeds George Trask as manager of the Mutual. He was formerly assistant manager. Mr. Trask was with the Mutual in Detroit for two years. J. C. Mack, of the Toledo office of the Mutual, goes to Detroit as assistant manager.

A. I. Shapiro, manager of the Triangle exchange, 75 Broadway, resigned to take effect December 1st. He will go to Buffalo as manager for Lew Rogers, who has acquired a number of state rights pictures for New York State.

Louis Nathan, manager of the Kleine-Edison-Essanay-Selig, Peter Smith building, takes to the road and is succeeded as manager by W. H. Irvine, formerly at the New York office of George Kleine.

R. A. Von Der Goltz has resigned as manager of the International Film Service exchange. Harry Dull is the new manager.

A. U. Thornburg.

Exchangeman Experienced Exhibitor

Frank B. Spurrier, manager of the Washington, D. C., V-L-S-E. exchange from the time of its inauguration, is now connected with Pathe, Inc., in charge of the Baltimore branch of the Washington office. He is succeeded by George F. Lenehan, who left Pathe about six weeks ago to join the selling force of the first named company. Prior to his connection with Pathe, Mr. Lenehan was assistant manager and in charge of the publicity work of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, marketing Paramount pictures.

Prior to entering the exchange end of the business, he was himself an exhibitor, being located in Buffalo, New York, and is therefore well qualified to fulfill the duties of his new office and can meet the exhibitors on their own ground.

Inventories General in Omaha

Manager Taylor of the General exchange in Omaha has just finished one of the most complete inventories ever made there. It included every reel, whether in the house, in transit or out on an emergency order. Every article of advertising material and other material in the exchange was subjected to inventory.

Another Satisfied Film Man

Lee D. Balsley, advertising agent of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, has just completed a tour of the State of Nebraska. He was very enthusiastic over the business accomplished on the trip and stated that the time spent was well worth the results.

Much Building on 'Frisco's Film Row

THE lower end of Golden Gate avenue has become the recognized film exchange center of San Francisco, and by the same token the center of the industry on the Pacific Coast. One by one the firms that have been scattered throughout the downtown district for the past few years are getting on this thoroughfare, or in the immediate neighborhood, and at the present time two buildings are being erected within one block for exclusive film exchange purposes, with others planned.

The California Comedy and Feature Film Exchange, which has been located at 120 Golden Gate avenue for several months, has taken over the part of the store formerly occupied by another concern. Manager Charles Klopot states that he expects to be in a position to offer a number of large productions shortly and that increased office and film storage space was necessary.

Splendid building weather has been experienced of late and work is being rushed on the film exchange building in course of erection at Golden Gate avenue and Leavenworth streets. The foundations are about completed and workmen will soon start on the walls. The first concern to arrange for space here was the Mutual Film Corporation and since then leases have been signed for most of the rest of it. Walter Preddey, now located on Eddy street, known throughout the country through his inventions, and owner of an extensive supply business, has arranged to take over a large store and will move as soon as this can be made ready.

The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service has also made arrangements through its manager, William O. Edmons, to take over quarters in this building as the facilities of the present quarters are entirely inadequate.

In case present arrangements are carried through the Metro Pictures Corporation, now located on Jones street, will move to Golden Gate avenue and will occupy a building near the structure being erected for the exclusive use of the Fox Film Corporation. A large block of land is available here and the owners have signified their willingness to build for any film exchange concerns desiring permanent and fireproof quarters.

The Western Poster Company has leased an entire brick building at 247-249 Golden Gate avenue, and will move to the new quarters about the first of December. This concern, which succeeded to the business of Davis Bros. several months ago, is controlled by I. H. Lichtenstein, formerly of the Globe Film Exchange. The poster rental business started by Davis Bros. was one of the first ventures of this kind in the whole country and has been conducted along original lines. It will probably be the first concern of the kind to occupy an entire modern structure.

Cincinnati Men Form Film Exchange

A long step forward has been taken by Cincinnati film men in the organization last week of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce. Membership in this organization, which is founded upon the same principles which prompted the establishment of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Chamber of Commerce, embraces one or more representatives from almost every exchange office in the district.

Nearly a year ago the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League allied itself, by the united action of its members, with the Chamber of Commerce, each member thereby becoming an active factor in the most influential trade body in Southern Ohio. The exchange men organized a Screen Club several months ago, but were unable to accomplish any definite results. The suggestion offered by H. Serkowich, secretary of the Retail Merchants' department of the commercial organization, that the exchange men affiliate with the Chamber of Commerce and thus become affiliated with the exhibitors' league was accepted.

At a preliminary meeting a constitution and rules and regulations were adopted and the following temporary officers were elected: H. A. Buge, president; I. W. McMahan, vice-president; C. E. Holah, treasurer, and H. Serkowich, secretary.

Election of officers for the coming year will take place December 1. The exchange men plan to get behind a movement in the Cincinnati district with the exhibitors to attract greater public interest in the motion picture industry, as a whole.

Taylor Loses Assistant in Omaha

Assistant John E. Flynn of the General exchange at Omaha, Neb., has been promoted to general manager of the exchange at Cleveland. He had been with the General in Omaha for a year, going to that company from the Mutual.

What makes his promotion doubly pleasant to Mr. Flynn is the fact that his home formerly was in Cleveland and his folks live there. He took with him, however, an Omaha girl whom he married four months ago.

Mr. Flynn has many friends in the middle west, all of whom join in sending him congratulations. Manager Taylor of the General exchange in Omaha says he is going to double up on his own work and get along without an assistant.

Feature Exchange Branch in Philadelphia Moves

Hereafter it will be known as Supreme Foto-Play Productions. This company which formerly had offices at 1325 Vine street has moved to 256 N. 13th street, Here attractive and home-like offices have been fitted up under the supervision of Harry Grelle, general manager of the company. A feature of this exchange is the little reception room in front for the use of exhibitors.

Here are comfortable chairs, settees and table of weathered oak, while copies of Motion Picture News are at hand for ready reference. Thus any exhibitor need not be bored if a little waiting falls to his lot.

Leo V. Levison for a long time associated with the World Film Corporation in various managerial capacities has become Eastern Division manager for Supreme. Besides Philadelphia, the company has established offices in Pittsburgh, Tyrone, Newark, N. J. and Kansas City, Kan.

James M. Ashcraft, formerly assistant general manager of Masterpiece Film Attractions in Philadelphia, is now New Jersey manager of the Supreme Foto-Play Productions with offices in the Proctor Theatre Building, Newark, N. J.

C. D. Struble for a long time associated with the General Film Company is manager of the Kansas City exchange with offices in the Gayety Theatre Building.

"Idle Wives," "Where Are My Children?" "Unwritten Law," Pavlowa in the "Dumb Girl of Portici," "Neptune's Daughter" and "The Christian" are the special features for which the Supreme has acquired the rights in various and sundry states.

"Where Are My Children?" is being sent out of the Kansas City office as a road show; to be exact as two road shows, one with F. P. McGovern as house manager and J. F. Walls as advance man. The other with C. M. Wilson as manager and Milton D. Crandall as advance man.

Every day the Philadelphia office is besieged with inquiries about the features owned by the Supreme. A specially large number of bookings are held on "Idle Wives," "Where Are My Children?" and Pavlova.

Cincinnati Gets Pioneer

The newly opened branch office of the International Film Service in Cincinnati will have for its manager C. E. Holah. Mr. Holah entered the moving picture industry seven years ago, being first engaged by the General Film Company at Cleveland, and later at Columbus, Ohio. After a year there he was transferred to New York where he had charge of the paper departments at both branches of the General Film Company. His work in the metropolis earned for him promotion to the Chicago office, where he managed what was at the time the largest paper department in the country. In February, 1915, he went with Pathe as manager of their Cincinnati office, meeting with such success that at the end of the year Vitagraph made a bid for his services in the same city.

Film Interest in Kansas City at High Pitch

G. H. BOWLES, publicity manager at the Universal Film and Supply Company at Kansas City, reports that he has received letters from two of their main exchanges; the Universal Film and Supply Company at Oklamoha City, and the Laemmle Film Service at Omaha, stating that the multigraph sheet, containing a newspaper story, some good advertising hints and information for the exhibitor, is "great stuff" and is helping a lot. The other main exchange at St. Louis has not yet been heard from.

J. H. Gilinsky, Oklahoma traveler for the Vitagraph Film Company at Kansas City, spent a few days in Kansas City recently, reporting a good business and large successes for the "Scarlet Runner."

F. E. Goff, assistant general manager, and H. D. Naugle, Coast division manager of the Vitagraph Film Company, were in Kansas City recently. They left for Omaha, Nebraska, where they expect to open a branch house.

The Kansas City Star has announced that a Motion Picture page will be run in its Sunday edition again. The page will contain advance notices of pictures; it will have feature stories and cuts. G. H. Bowles, who had charge of the Motion Picture page in the Star when it was attempted some eight months ago, helped outline a plan for the new page. F. B. Scott of the reportorial staff of the Star will handle the page.

The Bluebird exchange of the Universal Film and Supply Company at Kansas City, Mo., has just received "The Eagle's Wings," which is not on the regular program. The picture was run off and is pronounced very good by reviewers and others present.

The Universal Film and Supply Company at Kansas City supplied one of the six teams which recently organized the Grand Bowling League and will play Tuesday night of each week. The Universal is is the only team in the league in the film business. Captain of the team is D. O. Reese and the other members are: G. H. Bowles, R. C. Cropper, W. B. Emich, and G. B. Howe. At the first contest, the Universals won two out of three games, tying with two other teams for first honors. Each player is assessed sixty cents a week, half of which pays the running expenses, and the other half of which goes toward a prize fund to be awarded the winning team.

F. L. Kiltz, local manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, returned recently from Rich Hill, Mo., where he attended a family reunion. Mr. Kiltz was glad to see the old town people again, and the reverse of this was also true. Mr. Kitz's exhibitor friends of Kansas City recently presented him with a ten piece desk set and a dozen solid silver pens in token of the friendship which has always existed between them.

Changes in Des Moines Exchange Booking Staffs

CHARLES STOMBAUGH, Des Moines manager of the General Film Service, states that "The Girl from 'Frisco," Kalem, ran in five houses in Des Moines on the same day, the first week in December, while the following week several more showed the film.

Oscar Meisner, formerly poster man with the Des Moines Pathe, is now with the local Metro office as shipping clerk. Mr. Meisner succeeds Jack Hull, who recently resigned.

C. D. "Big Jim" Garrity, assistant booker with the Pathe office in Des Moines, recently broke into the selling end of the game. Mr. Garrity, who has held practically every job in the local office, was sent out on the road to close a contract and he came back with it. After he closed the contract he spent the afternoon in roller skating.

C. C. Mendenhall, who travels in Iowa for the Des Moines Film and Supply Company, Paramount distributors, is back on the road after an enforced lay-off of nearly three weeks. Mr. Mendenhall was confined to his home for this period due to an accident when he injured his ankle.

A. H. Blank, who was recently appointed district manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, is at present in New York City closing up this transaction. A plan for the reorganization of the Triangle interests, as well as new methods of distribution, will be worked out soon after Mr. Blank returns.

Advertising matter of "The Purple Mask," the new Universal serial, is already out in the Iowa territory, although the Des Moines office has not been officially notified of the existence of this production. Charles Stevenson, publicity manager of this office, working under the personal direction of Manager D. B. Lederman, has sent out circular letters and catchy advertising cards. Bookings have already been received on this, according to Mr. Lederman, and it looks as if it will go over big.

A bulletin board on which is pasted complimentary letters from exhibitors is one of the features of the local Mutual office. Letters and telegrams telling of the success of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," Charlie Chaplin pictures and of other Mutual releases are put here for visiting exhibitors and employees to see. Incidentally, Harry Hiersteiner, manager of the serial department, comments on the great success of the previously mentioned serial.

Miss W. E. Arthur, who for the past month has been representing the Mid-West Photo Play Corporation, handling the Clara Kimball Young releases in Iowa, has been transferred by Manager A. H. Blank to the Kansas City office. Miss Arthur is now traveling out of that office under the direction of the Kansas City manager, W. H. Bell. Miss Arthur will represent the Mid-West Company in Kansas and Missouri.

C. S. Stevenson.

JUST FOR FUN

Position in life isn't everything but position of apostrophe means quite a lot. "Exhibitor's Trade Review," it reads, and so can you blame the cute rascal who cornered us with the broad-side: "Wonder which exhibitor it means?" At that though the question isn't really difficult to answer.

The leisurely and languid exhibitor who heretofore has only been obliged to act in the capacities of manager, booking agent, music master, treasurer, et al, must needs take on a few dozen new duties according to the "advertising expert" of this self-same journal. The expert has a zoological trend of mind, although at times he runs to jewelry, particularly uncut diamonds. The exhibitor might advertise "The Plow Girl" with an ostrich—alive or stuffed—or with ostrich eggs. A bear and an eagle might come in handy in boosting other features.

But give ear, or rather eye, readers. The ostrich season has been very poor. Indications point to the fact that instead of making their winter quarters in lobbies, cash windows, projecting booths and back stage as has been their custom in the past, they will seek more congenial climes and will this winter be found in bar rooms, billiard academies and hotel foyers in preference to their former haunts.

Even now in an effort to elude the watchful exhibitor the ostrich is forsaking the main thoroughfares of the cities and seeking the less frequented by-streets. As for the stuffed birds they are somewhat easier to get. The National History Museum in New York has a few. If this source is out of the question merely procure a live one and then stuff it. Ostriches are somewhat foolish and no doubt the bird will believe anything you tell it.

Take the ostrich eggs as a last resort. This is a good idea. Both the ostrich and the egg are a means to the same end and no doubt your corner grocer will gladly supply you with a dozen eggs or so just for the run of the picture. Be sure to return them afterwards unhatched.

E. J. O'Donnell who has been publicity manager for the Sherman-Elliott Company in its exploitation of "The Crisis" has resigned to enter new fields of endeavor.

Director Lynn Reynolds gives as his formula for the concoction of a good screen story, the elimination of all scenes numbered thirteen or any multiple of it. And yet they say professionals are not superstitious.

Terry Pix a New One

And now Terry Ramsay rises in righteous wrath to throw the hooks into the word "movies." The ethereal and aesthetic tastes of Terry are rubbed the wrong way by the very whisper of the word. He would substitute the rythmetical and lucid sounding "pix" for a change. "It would be amply descriptive of the object in mind," adds Terry. For instance, "Mutual Pix Make Time Fly," "Mary Pickford, Queen of the Pix," or "Mutual Pixies."

The screen has lost a mighty fine actor and gained a promising director in the person of Howard Estabrook. Last week he left for Los Angeles where he will direct Vivian Martin in her next Famous Players-Jesse Lasky-Oliver Morosco-Pallas-Paramount picture. Mr. Estabrook has made a study of directing ever since he appeared in his first picture almost three years ago.

Claire McDowell brings our series of spasms lifted from the English publication to a close. Only the other day we noticed that all of them were credited to the authorship of Dick Willis. And suddenly the idea seeped into our brain that Dick Willis might be none other than the astute Richard Willis of the West Coast. And all the time we thought that Dick was an Englishman. If, Richard, you have so foully tricked us, we only hope that everyone seeing the reprinted spasms cuts them out and sends them to you collect.

Well, here is the last. Let us explain that Claire was once with Biograph, but is now with Universal.

"Declare your favorite dessert."

"Eclaire."

"What letters did you swear by?"

"BI-O."

"Who do you prefer now?"

"U."

"What did your parents do to make you an actress?"

"Smacdowell."

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby are still "vimming" it in Jacksonville at the rate of a Vim comedy every week. It's strenuous work, but conditions are pleasant enough to make for the utmost in effort, the result being that it is as easy to Vim as to vamp, as Miss Theby who used to do the latter gorgeously, will tell you.

Jack Dean is a blacksmith in Fannie Ward's next picture. George Melford told him that he had a horse for him to shoe. "Nothing doing" returned the valiant John, "I am one of those blacksmiths that shoe flies." One might suppose from this that Harvey Thew was neglecting his duties in the continuity department.

The Kaiser is to glimpse "Civilization" when he isn't exploring the inner recesses of Bucharest or playing golf along the Somme. The Pope and the King of England were dickering for the first look at the picture, but the Ince publicity department finally accepted the Kaiser's bid ahead of all others. A movement is on foot to get a testimonial from this noted witness. "Civilization" is said to have been produced by Thomas H. Ince.

Producers don't like adverse reviews. Naturally not. Sometimes, though, they help such reviews along. Their methods are sundry and villainous. Sometimes the third reel is placed on the machine first, is followed by the first perhaps or the fifth and the second and fourth come in somewhere else. This has happened twice during the last year, which seems too much. (Boy, page Walthill!) On other occasions an interesting animated weekly is sandwiched in between two of the reels, which sort of breaks up the suspense. Another favorite pastime is running a drama at the break-neck speed of eight minutes to a reel. This goes well for slapstick but not for drama intended to be intense. They go to the other extreme, too. A few companies insist on running at a speed that seems to be twenty minutes to a reel. This is inclined to induce deep sleep. Why not run them off with everything normal?

"Girl Reporter" to Have Newspapers' Aid

"Perils of Our Girl Reporters," a fifteen-story series, written by Edith Sessions Tupper and produced by the Niagara Film Studios, with George Terwilliger as director, is to be released on December 28 by the Mutual Film Corporation.

The play carries fifteen complete stories of episodes in the life and work of a girl reporter. It will feature Earle Metcalfe, Zena Keefe, and Helen Greene.

The Mutual Film Corporation will launch the advertising campaign beginning with the release of "Story No. 1" of the series and at the same time a big billboard drive will begin, five thousand twenty-four sheet stands of posters being ordered for display, covering every large city of the country. The newspaper campaign is to dovetail with the poster and other advertising.

Thousands of specially prepared magazines carrying the story in its original form have been prepared for circulation among exhibitors, the plan being to furnish every exhibiting house with a sufficient stock of the magazines to permit distribution of the story among audiences wherever the play is being run.

In dramatizing "Perils of Our Girl Reporters," Miss Tupper has not confined herself to any one type of girl reporter. We have the political girl reporter and the diplomatic girl reporter, who worms her way into the secrets of governments, the girl crime reporter who can wheedle a murderer into a confession, and the girl social reporter who discovers just what the reason was for the Montgomery De Montmorency divorce and interviews the other woman.

Helen Greene, who has the chief role, gained her first picture experience with the Lubin Company. With them she appeared in "Heartaches," "Beyond All Is Love," "Her Wayward Sister," "The Uplift," and many others.

Continuity Writers Engaged for Art Dramas Program

The Art Dramas Company has engaged E. H. Bingham, who is responsible for the scenario of the first Art Drama, "The Lash of Destiny," in which Gertrude McCoy is featured, as continuity writer.

Rudolph de Cordova, who wrote the Metro version of "Romeo and Juliet," was engaged to write the scenario of "Whoso Findeth a Wife," which is being produced by Herbert Blache for the Art Dramas program. The scenario is founded on the novel of the same name, which is a reply to Hall Cain's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." Jean Sothern is starred in this production.

Anthony Kelly, than whom there is no more prolific writer of scenarios, is responsible for the adaptation of "The Rainbow," from the original play of the same name. Dorothy Bernard is presented in the leading role in this picture by William L. Sherrill. Mr. Kelly also wrote the continuity of "The Witching Hour," the great success of the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Circle Management Praises Educational Films

Many interesting letters in praise of the scenic and educational productions of the Educational Films Corporation of America have been received in the last few days at their executive offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

These letters have been received from managers of the highest class motion picture theatres in the country. S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Circle Theatre in Indianapolis, was so impressed by this company's pictures, that he has written the following letter to E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager.

A letter of this kind is particularly significant as coming from the Circle Theatre, because of the fact that it is considered one of the finest in the Middle West. The following letter was received:

"Educational Films Corporation,
"729 Seventh avenue,
"New York, N. Y.
"Dear Sir:—

"Permit me to express an appreciation of your excellent scenic and travel pictures, the first of which, 'The Land of Silence,' we are playing this week.

"It is truly gratifying to be able to present subjects of such great beauty, photographed with always an eye to the artistic, with locations selected by a man evidently a lover of nature and with an eye always receptive to the majesty of nature; but it is more gratifying to hear an audience applaud the picture throughout its presentation and give an ovation at its conclusion.

Selig Sees More Orderly Sabbath in Sunday Opening

WILLIAM N. SELIG, one of the pioneers in the motion picture industry, was recently interviewed on the subject of Sunday motion picture shows. "One can look back for the past seven or eight years and can then appreciate the wonderful influence wielded by motion pictures in the Sabbath Observance cause. Motion pictures coupled with 'Sabbath Observance' may sound queer to the 'hidebound,' but to thinking people the motion picture is a means to a more orderly Sabbath.

"Before the popularity of the motion pictures, Young America, particularly in the cities, was thrown in close proximity to saloons, beer gardens, pool rooms and other amusement places of like character, all particularly tempting on the Seventh Day. Following the establishment of the neighborhood or community picture theatre, an immediate falling off of patronage in other directions was noticeable on Sunday. This fact was particularly noticeable to the saloon man, who considers the motion picture theatre as his greatest enemy in a business way. And furthermore, motion pictures, with very rare exceptions, are clean, elevating and educating to the young.

"Then there is the financial side to the question. Young America turned loose for one entire day with a week's wages in his pocket rarely had funds the following Monday morning. It costs money to play pool or indulge in Sunday excursions. When the motion picture theatres became numerous all this was changed. Young America and his best girl discussed the movies, the players, and read all there was to read on motion picture topics. Then it was found that ten cents admission for a Sunday afternoon movie matinee was much better than ten dollars gone and a Monday morning headache.

Ex Kalem Star Hired

Anna Q. Nillson has been engaged by the Erbograph Company to play the leading parts in their feature pictures that are released on the Art Dramas program.

While with the Kalem Company, she played the leading role in "Shenandoah," "The Fall of Quebec," and other pictures.

Miss Nillson has also played for the Fox organization, starring in "The Regeneration," and for George Kleine in "The Scarlet Road." The Pathe Company engaged Miss Nillson next to play the leading role in its serial "Who Pays?"

Oesterriecher with Unicorn

Maurice Oesterriecher, formerly manager of the Forest Park theatre of Chicago, is now employed by the Chicago Unicorn Film Service to book Billie West comedies in the theatres of this city. He reports that he is meeting with excellent success in this new venture.

Carl F. Senning, manager of Fox Film Corporation, Washington, D. C., is on a trip through the South with a view of making known to the exhibitors the new policy of Fox in issuing comedies beginning with the first of the year. During his absence Mary Jeffreys is at the helm, and business is running on with the hustle that has characterized this office.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The People vs. John Doe"

(Universal—Five to Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

IF there are six reels in this picture, we believe the measuring machine would not register them a thousand feet each. It appears to have suffered badly at the hands of the cutters. The underlying theme of the plot, that the pursuit of this poor victim of circumstantial evidence and the misery brought to his distressed family is caused by the greed of the detectives who sought a thousand dollar reward, fails to register clear. A short title, announcing the offer of the reward, will hardly be accepted by the audience as explaining such unhuman man-hounding as follows:

Scene after scene of the most harrowing "third degree" methods is shown, and even the court is made to appear to ignore the well-known first principle of all criminal procedure, the inelegibility as proof to any extent of forced confession. We admire Lois Weber's truly wonderful presentation of these scenes, but we cannot but feel that her work suffered seriously also from the introduction of the ten-twenty-thirty type of villainous detectives, who by their overacting made the third degree seem a frame-up of theirs, rather than a bona-fide attempt to secure justice in a manner that is resorted to every day in criminal practice.

Couple the gruesome and almost uncanny scenes of the storm and the murder, repeated twice through the trick of having the story pictured as a vision to the prisoner as part of the third degree, with the splendidly portrayed grief of the accused man and the suffering of his family, and a most powerful plot is taken advantage of to the fullest possible extent. Here is where Miss Weber's masterly hand is evident.

But had she stuck entirely to a sincere portrayal of harsh treatment within reasonable probability, coupled with the scenes which make the play even as it now stands, a most remarkable one, this feature would have made a thunderous impression on the whole country. As it is there can be no doubt the play will be much talked of and the scenes mentioned hit with terrific force. Evelyn Selbie did truly big-star work as John Doe's wife, and Harry DeMore as John Doe, and Willis Mark as the Half-Wit Brother could not have seemed more perfectly to fit their roles.

This play will be favorably received everywhere. As to convincing against capital punishment, which is its purpose, it lays a fine foundation for discussion of this question, but can only clinch it if one feels the story is real and typical of common, everyday miscarriage of justice. Where the picture rings true it offers an unassailable argument in favor of abolishment of capital punishment.

"Oliver Twist"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

MARIE DORO'S portrayal of Oliver Twist reminds us of Dickens' other orphans, but of all the sad and luckless little band we love Oliver the best—perhaps because there have been more heartaches over his wrongs. In the charming little actress, Oliver, as Dickens conceived him, lives and suffers the bitter trials described by the beloved author.

From the first scene where Oliver, egged on by the hungry boys, has the temerity to ask for more porridge, until his visit to Fagin in prison, there is not a jarring note. While some Dickens lovers may regret that good scenes have been left out of the picture, they will certainly not be disappointed in what has been put in. Every member of the company from the "Gentleman in the white waistcoat" to Bill Sikes, Oliver and Fagin, could have stepped out of a Cruikshank illustration. So excellent are the delineations they could be shown without a line of introduction to anyone familiar with the Cruikshank and Phiz drawings. Even the dog is the kind you never see on the street without thinking of Bill Sikes.

Miss Doro, white and fragile as a snowdrop, depicts the unwelcome and unloved child, who with big questioning eyes wonders that so much misery should fall to the lot of one small orphan. Miss Doro's acting is exceptionally good in Oliver's long tramp, after his escape from the coal cellar, when footsore, his tired little legs give way under him and he sinks down by a milestone.

Oliver's innocent belief that he has found an honest friend in the Artful Dodger, his ingenuous pleasure and willingness to learn the deft game taught in Fagin's school of pickpockets, are faithfully represented. The child's horror when he discovers that his new friends are thieves shows that although the "Board" had kept Oliver's stomach empty they had filled his mind full of the eighth commandment.

James Neil catches the spirit of Grimwig, who conceals a tender heart under a testy manner. He predicts that Oliver will go back to the thieves and not come home with Mr. Brownlow's books and change. Grimwig is shown to be as disappointed as Dickens intended the character to be, when the boy fails to return. The murder of Nancy is accomplished better than film murders are generally. Sikes, splendidly played by Hobart Bosworth, is shown with his big stick; blow after blow descends, but by a clever Lasky lighting device we do not see the blows fall on the crouching woman. Tully Marshall was Fagin, the merry old gentleman who brought sadness to Oliver.

The spirit of the author pervades every scene. The moral that Dickens hoped his story would teach is apparent. Sin and crime are not made attractive and much good comes out of great evil. Parents should take their children to see Oliver Twist; it carries a lesson to all besides being a genuinely entertaining picture.

"The Fight in Camp I"

(Signal-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

JUST which fight is meant in this title it would be hard to decide, for the eighth chapter of "A Lass of the Lumberlands" is one fight after another. Compared with her escapades in former chapters, Helen Holmes has a brief respite, although excitement marks every scene for the rest of the characters.

The cook of the lumber camp and a crony share the contents of a bottle that has been pilfered from the hospital supplies. The consequences are a burnt dinner, a study in table etiquette and a justly indignant attack upon the kitchen. The Lass, to quell the angry and hungry men, takes the place of the incapacitated cook and placidly bakes pies for the camp.

There is plenty of action to satisfy the most extravagant demands. A jealous man tries to punish one of the Lass' admirers and a brisk fight takes place. An immense tree is felled and its fall completely demolishes a cabin where a moment before a weeping woman had been shown. The incidents are thoroughly wholesome and excite a curiosity about the next installment.

"The Victoria Cross"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

SEVERAL tense scenes mark this unusual play with its settings of quaint East Indian narrow streets, and other unmistakable marks of faithful reproduction of Cawnpore, as we are used to seeing it in travelogs, and as it may be presumed to have looked at the time of this story which is adapted from Paul Potter's play based on the Sepoy Mutiny and massacre of the English in 1857.

Lou Tellegen as Major Ralph Seton plays the role of an English officer, who has become dissolute through the lax moral surroundings of the decadent court of Mahratta. The inevitable result of wine and woman interfering with duty follows, and a story full of interest is developed with a thread of romance to bind it together. Princess Adala (Mabel Van Buren) at the instigation of a native officer and conspirator, Azimoolah (Sessue Hayakawa), finds it an easy matter to divert Major Seton from the watchful care which his command requires, and while he is flirting with Adala the native rebels are looting the arsenal and preparing for a massacre. At this juncture his former sweetheart, Joan (Cleo Ridgley), with her father, Sir Allan Strathallan (Ernest Joy), arrive and find themselves at the mercy of the native ruler. Major Seton, finally aware of the seriousness of his offense, and feeling that he has no longer the right to the Victoria Cross which Sir Allan had been commissioned to bring to him, determines to regain his position and the confidence of the girl he loves. It is almost too late, but through a succession of fast following episodes he braves the dangers of war and finally is able to lead a rescue party which saves the women from worse than death and proves his character as a man of limitless courage and real worth.

The scenes showing the defense of the garrison were exceedingly realistic, and dramatically the work of Mr. Tellegen and Sessue Hayakawa stood out in many places. Miss Ridgley has the role of Joan, the Major's sweetheart, but it is not a role giving her the usual opportunity to register her talent. In fact, in spite of the tense theme of the play, great demand is not made on the principals except in the climaxes.

"War as It Really Is"

(Capt. Donald C. Thompson—War Films—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY STEVE TALBOT

BEGINNING with a close-up of Captain Thompson wearing a "gas mask" and steel helmet, and removing same to appear in aerial attire, these views are distinctive to the end. The aeroplane flights and photography therefrom are superior to any lofty photography shown hereabouts so far. Either exceptionally decent weather or perfect camera work, and perhaps both, are responsible.

Some of this series has appeared in bits at the Rialto lately, selected by S. Rothapfel for breaking up his program. It is possible that Manager Rothapfel made his selections from the entire collection and that the remainder is this "War As It Really Is," which is to be sold on states rights basis now. However that may be, in its entirety, the Thompson war views excel in clarity of photography. Decidedly pro-Ally as the material is, it shows interesting effects of the German sweep through the war zone. Massed bodies of French and English troops en route; piled stores of shells; slumbering cannon, aero craft, and German prisoners; views from aloft of trenches as well as of battleships all go toward packing the seven reels with interest.

Much detail is clearly screened in the corpses and skeletons piled about deserted fortifications. The very fine photography and immense expanse of territory covered at a sweep of the camera lense, bring this collection of front-line-of-battle pictures up to any war films yet seen on this side, as far as merit goes. Their value at box offices depends as ever—upon the state of the public appetite for such pictures.

The transport service of the Allied armies is intimately shown and some odd features of handling prisoners and making them useful as well as helpless mark the concluding scenes. As pictorial comment upon the uselessness of war, these pictures are most effective. Intimate photographs of the French military chiefs and political heads are numerous and exceptional.

"Sealed Lips"

(American—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE third chapter of the sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" is as full of stirring incidents as either of its predecessors, and finds Quabba, the gypsy king, still on the trail of De Vaux and Blair Stanley and successfully frustrating their efforts to obtain the diamond and despatch the only living heir to the Stanley estates in Virginia.

The picture is directed by Edward Sloman, and reflects great credit on his management, for all the cast, even down to the youthful heir, acquit themselves well and compel keen interest. The photography is distinct and the gypsy scene showing two score gypsies dancing around a camp fire to the music of Quabba's violin is thoroughly descriptive.

Returning to the theme, we now find the diamond in the possession of Vivian Stanley, the deserted wife of Blair Stanley, she having invaded the gypsy tent under cover of darkness while the dance above mentioned was in progress. Blair Stanley and De Vaux too, visit the same wagon and are surprised by Quabba and a death struggle ensues, which terminates with Quabba bound by ropes and the two marauders greatly annoyed at not finding the gem.

In the cast are William Tedmarsh, Ward McAllister, William Russell, Rhea Mitchell, Mollie Shafer and Charlotte Burton.

Released Monday, December 11.

"The Female of the Species"

(Triangle-Kay Bee—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SOMETHING new in vampires is introduced in this picture, one of the works of Russell E. Smith. She loses out in a fight to win the man she loves away from his wife. The fellow forgets the past as a result of shock sustained in a railroad wreck and then is content to live on as the vampire's husband. The arrival of his wife changes the complexion of the situation, for the husband falls in love with her all over again. The vampire realizes she has lost again, and departs, and an operation on the husband's head restores his memory and he finds out whom he's really married to.

A Useless Appeal

The author has made a serious mistake in placing the two women on the same footing in the latter part of the picture when they battle for the good graces of the man. The vampire, Gloria, doesn't win any sympathy when she goes down to defeat and the author's attempt to thrust it upon her is unconvincing and only succeeds in bringing ridicule on his own head.

The points that line up in favor of the picture are its good production, its one big thriller and its several good characterizations rendered by the three leads. The work of the Ince production department is never open to criticism. The polish it contributes to pictures counts largely in the ultimate good effect they create. The thrill is a head-on collision in the dead of night between two trains. It is not done in miniature, and can be played up as the real thing—and a good thing.

Far Away from Broadway

The work done by the leads is very good. Dorothy Dalton as the vampire plays with feeling, a little too much of it at times, and possesses the physical requirements for such a role. Howard Hickman as the husband, and Enid Markey as the at first insignificant wife, do creditable work. The support comprises Aggie Herring, Roy Laidlaw and Gertrude Claire.

The scenario of "The Female of the Species" was somewhat padded to meet the measurements of the film. It has a series of scenes forming a weak anti-climax at the end, while in other places the scenarioist has deprived the observer of the slightest use of his imagination by the use of lengthy explanatory inserts when the player's expression was sufficiently suggestive of itself.

"The Honor of Mary Blake"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture has to do with a girl from a traveling repertoire company. Somehow we can't get away from the idea that the picture bears a close resemblance to the stuff offered by such "rep" companies—and poorer ones. It is melodrama handled without a sense of the artistic. "Sheriff, I am ready," says the hero, standing erect, and the sheriff almost waxes emotional as he leads his captive away. The players, all of them, play too much to the camera and show a lack of appreciation for any other part of the setting than the foreground. There are the town prudes. The old maids, impossible characters, sew and gossip with their "do says" and sly winks. The old grouches that stand by their Methodist minister and look with horror on anything pertaining to the stage—they are there too.

But more important than all its accessories is the conventional and ill-woven plot itself. An innocent farmer lad marries the ingenue from the road company. She wants to tell him of her past—perfectly innocent, yet not elegant—and he refuses to listen. And so they are married. Then when the man from out the ingenue's past appears the husband is willing to believe anything black about his wife that anyone says. But he shoots the intruder and this brings things to a head. The intruder confesses and the one minister who is not a prude succeeds in reconvincing the farmer that his wife is innocent.

"The Honor of Mary Blake" is not a great picture. Its like was seen many years ago and the story doesn't bear revival. It has an appeal we suppose to some, but even that is worn. What, with the amateurish direction and some of the performances it fares poorly. James O'Neill, for instance, plays to the lens heavily. Sidney Mason as the hero, never looks like a farmer. Tina Marshall is good in a role of the slangy chorus girl type.

Violet Mersereau is featured as the ingenue. Miss Mersereau likes to be kittenish and appealing; that is as far as her expressions allow her to go. In the end Violet bows and says "That's All" and really that is about the best thing she does.

"The Enemy"

(Vitagraph—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

WE presume the Vitagraph Company has determined to issue this picture in the seven-reel length in which it was shown for review, but to do so is in our opinion a serious mistake. We cannot say how much could be eliminated and still carry the full effect of the story, but there was more than one scene which diverted attention from the plot.

The story compels serious attention, from anyone, which we do not think the average story depicting the evil of drink does. It is not overdrawn, nor does it get all its force from showing horrible examples who spend most of their time making other people suffer. This play deals with refined people—yes, "Bow-wow" in all his gutter experience, does not appear tough. He appears pitiful. Pity is the strong theme of the story.

The only exaggeration noticed was the enormous size of the drinks taken (they must have been of grape-juice in reality, or some similarly harmless liquid). But the average playgoer will never think of these points, and granting as proper this director's license, Paul Scardon has given us a wonderful production, way above ordinary, and entirely in a class by itself as regards this kind of theme. We recommend it unequivocally as a picture to be sought, rather than barred, even in theatres where this kind of subject is not ordinarily a popular theme.

Julia Swayne Gordon, in support of Mr. Kent, is as great in this picture as she was in "Million Bid." Peggy Hyland, Evart Overton, James Morrison, all have important roles and play them thoroughly well. Interest in the story begins with the first scene. The derelect creature of the gutter, called by his companions "Bowwow," carries your sympathy as he climbs up and up to his former place as a brilliant man, and then falls again back to where he started.

Bowwow Finds a New Friend

While still able to realize his plight, he takes the suicide route. In the meantime sympathy is divided with the younger man who is a victim of plot and circumstance, and who seems liable to choose the same insidious poisoned path as Harrison Stuart. But the example of the older man saves the younger, and the final shock of the suicide clinches for all time the grip Billy takes on himself, once he sees the danger is a real one and that he ought, as he has been told, to run "even like a coward" from such an enemy, rather than stand and risk a defeat against such odds.

We do not ever expect again to see such a perfect delineation of a human derelict, in a serious role, as is offered by Charles Kent. To the exhibitor who plans to show this picture, we suggest by all means a calling together of press and church representatives, some time in advance of its showing, to get the aid they will surely give. You cannot advertise too strongly its power as a moral lesson, clean, straight from the shoulder, and without glorifying at any stage, the seamy side.

"The Vampires"

(The Eyes that Hold) and (Satanas)—Fifth and Sixth Episodes of "The Vampires." Gaumont-Mutual. Three reels each)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THESE two chapters of this picture, portraying the extremes to which the arch criminals of Paris will go to gain their ends are just as full of fire and energy as any of their predecessors—in fact there is a grimness that is wholly compelling; that grips one's attention and holds it throughout.

Philip Guard (Edmond Mathe) the cub reporter, undertakes more than generally falls to a cub reporter's lot, but then he receives valuable "tips" from Normandin (Marcel Lovesque) an ex-Vampire, who knows the haunts and the methods practised by the Vampires, so that of course helps considerably.

In "The Eyes that Hold" episode the Grand Vampire (Eugene Ayme) interests the guests of the hotel with an alleged history of his grandfather's part in Napoleon's invasion of Spain, his idea being to keep them together while his accomplice and ever ready tool Irma Vep (Juliet Musidora) ransacks the room assigned to an American in search of a chart believed to be a guide to the spot where a large sum of money is hidden. Philip Guard, however, has already found and removed the treasure, but the plans of the Grand Vampire are circumvented by Moreno (Jacques Hermann) who breaks into the room, hypnotizes Irma Vet and carries her to his own room. He then substitutes another girl for Irma Vep and secures the map. Moreno takes Irma Vep to his own home and instructs her, while she is in a hypnotic trance, to fire a revolver at the first person who comes through the door. He then invites the Grand Vampire to visit him. Irma Vep shoots the man as he comes into the room.

The sixth episode reveals Moreno congratulating himself on having despatched the Grand Vampire, when he receives notice from Satanas (Henri Loubas) the new Chief that he (Moreno) should join the Vampires and Irma Vep should remain loyal, citing the direful things that would happen them on refusal. Having narrowly escaped death from an electrically fired, silent cannon they agree to accede to the Grand Vampire's request and their first "assignment" is to rob a wealthy Chicagoan and this they do to the tune of $100,000 by a novel scheme. But alas! Philip Guard is on their trail—they are captured and turned over to the police.

The chapters are full of incidents of hair-raising propositions, the photography is excellent and the parts undertaken by the members are faithfully portrayed without too much leaning toward the over-doing of any one of them. Irma Vep—a transposition of the letters spelling "Vampire" is delightfully unassuming and carries out the villainous designs of her masters with the utmost "sang-froid."

"Universal Screen Magazine"

(Issue Number Four—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AN elaboration over the Animated Weekly is the "Universal Screen Magazine," containing pictures of new inventions and topical events of interest for all time rather than for the date of issue.

The fourth number shows a new mail-taking device for use at railroad stations. Several bags of mail are hung in a row instead of only one, as heretofore, and the arm protruding from the mail car snatches each one off the racks as the train dashes by.

Another event of considerable interest is the activities of the horse doctor of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It is quite a new sensation to see a horse lifted in a framework and laid on the operating table in order to have its ankle bandaged.

Many people will be surprised to catch a glimpse of a plant, commonly known as the Venus Fly Trap. When a fly alights on any one of its many leaves, they close up instantly and the fly is imprisoned. This even beats the "Swat the Fly" method.

The greatest novelty of the reel is disclosed at the end when some work of a sculptor, Willie Hopkins, is exhibited. The work appears self-creating on the screen, much in the fashion of Hy Mayer's cartoons in the Animated Weekly.

All in all, a most interesting magazine reel.

"Whom the Gods Destroy"

(Vitagraph-V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IRELAND at the outbreak of the European war offered plenty of opportunities for the imaginative scenarioist. As far as we know Cyrus Townsend Brady is the first to have utilized these. And he has utilized them to excellent advantage weaving a powerful drama about an Irish revolutionist who thought to strike at his mother country in her greatest hour of need. The tension created by the story is invariably high. Mr. Brady doesn't wait until the last reel to spring a lone big scene. His is a picture crowded with stirring moments from the first reel to the last.

"Whom the Gods Destroy" is notable for other reasons than Mr. Brady's unusual theme. It marks the return of Alice Joyce to the screen after a good many years of absence. In a part that gives her full play we doubt if Miss Joyce has ever been seen to better advantage. The other leads, Harry Morey and Marc MacDermott do sterling work too. The exhibitor may well take into consideration the popularity of these three players and boost them heavily. Their work will do justice to even colored superlatives.

The story centers on Sir Denis Esmond (Mr. MacDermott) who contemplates leading a band of Irishmen against England. In this he is aided by Mary O'Neil (Miss Joyce), the girl he loves. St. George Leigh (Mr. Morey) another admirer of Mary's and a true English patriot, is temporarily blinded on his ship and is sent to Mary's home to recuperate. Here he discovers Denis' plans and succeeds finally in dissuading him from his purpose. To do so he is obliged to rip the bandage from his eyes—to see for a moment, but to go blind again—for life.

But St. George has not worked quickly enough. Denis is arrested, tried, found guilty of high treason and sentenced to be hanged. Here Mr. Brady has introduced the King of England and given him the power to pardon the Irishman. The King does, at the instigation of St. George, and the latter then believed he must leave Mary for ever, but she prefers him as a man nobler than the rambunctious Irishman.

To our mind it is always bad policy to introduce any noted living figure in motion pictures, particularly if that figure be crowned head of a nation. Thomas Mills as the King is a good actor, but as soon as such a character is introduced, the player, try as he will, is unable to create the necessary illusion of reality and royalty. But this is a small point. Perhaps after all it is unfair to mention it. The King is not a lead here and the scenes in which he appears are few.

William P. S. Earle in association with J. Stuart Blackton produced the picture in a highly acceptable fashion. Logan Paul, Charles Kent, Mary Maurice and Bernard Siegel have other important roles.

Three Christie Comedies

(Hist! At Six O'Clock"—One reel. "His Model Wife"—One reel. "O for the Coin"—Two parts)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THESE three comedies released during the latter part of December and the early part of the new year, are average products from Al Christie's fun factory. While no one of them is sufficiently humorous to be stamped as a record breaker or to be dealt with in superlatives and wildly enthusiastic phrases, each has enough real laughs to win approval from practically any audience.

"Hist! At Six O'clock" is a burlesque on the vampire picture written by William E. Wing. Betty Compson is featured as the vampire and she regales herself with all the usual trappings—a clinging black gown, an exaggerated pantherine movement, etc. The fact that the picture is a burlesque on such a popular form of serious entertainment should be responsible for its success more than the character of the burlesque itself. Mr. Wing, it seems, has overlooked a great number of possibilities in the construction of his story and some of the points should have been made with greater clarity than is the case. The story has been given an elaborate production by Mr. Christie. Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns and Eddie Barry are seen in good parts.

"His Model Wife" has a gerat lot to do with an artist's model, and we see a good bit of the model—all of her in fact. Through the mistaken notions of the deacon, a husband is led to believe that his wife has posed for an artist minus a hundred per cent of her clothing. Here the chase begins which takes the participants over housetops and through the streets before they are exhausted and the truth comes to light that the wife never posed at all. Horace Davey directed this with a cast composed of Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns, Harry Ham and Eddie Barry.

"Out for the Coin" runs about fifteen hundred feet and is quite the best of the three. Try & Helpus are two junk dealers, who have to raise five hundred to pay the rent which the villainous landlord demands. Various times the five hundred is placed in their hands but always it is removed therefrom by a grouchy policeman. This was also written by William Wing and is much better worked out than the other. The humor in it is of the rough-and-tumble variety and has been effectively pictured by Director Christie. Betty Compson, Eddie Barry, Neal Burns, Frank O'Neil and Dave Morris take the important roles.

"The Girl Who Doesn't Know"

(B. S. Moss—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS looks like a sincere effort on the part of the producers to preach against the ignorance that many families allow their daughters to grow up in. It is a preachment labeled with a title calculated to draw the curious. It won't be attacked by straight-laced censor boards, for its contents are quite harmless. The only members of the community who are likely to take exception to it are the wooden-headed folk who believe that lack of knowledge of certain phases of life means eternal goodness. "The Girl Who Doesn't Know" preaches that Innocence is akin to Ignorance and that Ignorance leads to sorrow.

The picture is opened by a dozen or more subtitles, supposedly spoken by a minister. These dwell on the fact that every girl should know "the pitfalls that surround her." The story introduces Zelma, a girl of the slums, whose life is unhappiness personified. She finally succumbs to temptation (not knowing what she does) and allows herself to fall into the power of a gambler and libertine.

Out in the country, Martin, a minister, incurs the displeasure of his congregation by his frankness and he leaves for the city to preach his gospel in the slums.

Zelma finally realizes her futile position and leaves the gambler. She encounters the minister. He saves her from suicide and takes her home to his mother. After a while he falls in love with her and then the gambler emerges from out the past and lays envious eyes on the minister's young sister. Zelma, her better nature awakened, warns Martin of the man's character, and in so doing discloses her own past. Matrin is torn by conflicting emotions for a time, but at last acts on the principle that "to err is human, to forgive divine," and takes Zelma as his wife.

Marie Empress and R. Henry Grey do average work in the principal parts and support of a like character is furnished by Zada Marlow, Henry Stanley, Ruth White, George Theilan and Robyn Adair. The direction of Charles Earl Bartlett is creditable.

In the cutting of the film many of the salient points of the picture have been left to be told in the subtitles, and while this detracts somewhat from the performances of the players, it harms the whole little. "The Girl Who Doesn't Know" should make money. Its title is a big thing.

"The Stain of Chuckawalla"

(Girl From Frisco Series—Chapter Nineteen—Kalem—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THIS kind of a series picture can well run on indefinitely, for it amounts really to motion picture stock company production with a guarantee of good repertoire of plays. The Kalem Company has certainly provided plots of real interest for these two-reel stories. This week the heroine, Barbara Brent (Marin Sais) sets out to reform the "pizenest town that ever grew on a desert"—and you know desert means thirst. She set out to kill that thirst, and did it by acquiring the ownership of the local paper and showing up all the wickedness in bold print. None gainsayed her, until the owner of the saloon, finding business going to nothing, organized a dynamiting party and almost succeeded in interrupting the publication. But when it was all over, Barbara calmly opened the big safe and produced the full issue of papers unharmed, which carried the day and caused the town to go "dry" as a result of the latest expose of the saloon ring's tactics. Such a picture as this deserves special mention for the true manner in which the Western type is created. An old hand Hoe press is shown in actual operation, and this alone is worth the two thousand feet devoted to the story. The newspaper office is real to a fault. The kind of picture audiences anywhere will enjoy.

"The Heiress of Coffee Dan's"

(Triangle-Fine Arts—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BESSIE LOVE has a light and innocuous vehicle in "The heiress at Coffee Dan's" that enables her to display her ability to fair advantage. Miss Love has alternate moments of humor and pathos and registers nicely every time. Her admirers will no doubt delight in the picture, for it is mostly Bessie Love. On the other hand, the whole fabric might have been considerably stronger if there had been a more prominent thread of romance running through it and if the hero had shown himself more of a man. Miss Love is delightful, but she needs a little more assistance than she has received here.

She appears as a waitress, "Waffles," who slings hash and juggles wheats at Coffee Dan's, together with Shorty Olson, the cook. Some crooks learn of the fortune awaiting a missing heiress and easily prevail upon "Waffles" to claim ownership. "Waffles" doesn't know she is doing wrong; in fact, she has been talked into believing she is the heiress. The crooks plan to marry her off to one of the gang and then depart with the fortune, but fate and the chicken-hearted lover of "Waffles" intervene in the middle of the marriage. Then the real heiress shows up and it's back to the hash-house for "Waffles" and her companions, but they get a substantial reward for rounding up the crooks.

There are some unique and homely situations introduced in this by the author, Bernard McConville, who obviously was not attempting to establish a record in scenario writing—more than likely he was aiming for the perfection of a vehicle for Miss Love. With the exception of the two points already carried he has fared well. Max Davidson carries a good comedy character role in the person of Olson. Frank Bennett is the musician-lover, and he overdoes the role to a considerable extent. Lucille Younge, Alfred Paget and Alva Blake have substantial parts. The direction of Edward Dillon is satisfactory.

"The Shielding Shadow"

(Pathe—Thirteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A DARING jump from a high bridge and a realistic fire scene are the features of this episode, which is called "The Hidden Menace."

Sebastian, still in possession of the priceless black mantle which enables him to appear and disappear at will, seeks the bottle containing the black pellets which was lost in the accident of the previous number. A laborer, Pat McGuire, finds it and, just by luck, Leontine comes along and claims it. At that moment an invisible hand clutches for it and there wages a mysterious and somewhat humorous fight between Pat and his invisible enemy for possession of the bottle.

The fight continues out on to a high bridge, where Sebastian suddenly becomes visible and, after a severe struggle, manages to throw the plucky Irishman into the water. The bottle is thought to have gone to the bottom, but instead it floats and later it is seized by the hand and removed.

Ravengar has been imprisoned in an empty garage by Sebastian. He escapes in time to rush to his laboratory, where Leontine has been imprisoned by her villainous husband, who, to make the job complete, has also set fire to the house. Ravenger arrives at the crucial moment and carries Leontine from the burning building and then the episode ends.

"The Five Franc Piece"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

THIS picture has a definite appeal for the audience that likes an unusual story, even when the plot's originality is created at the expense of probability.

The entire attention of the spectator is centered on the unfolding of the plot, since the players merely go through the necessary actions without attempting character delineation. Edith Johnson is a pretty heroine, and Lafayette McKee's make-up for the part of Napoleon Bonaparte is good. Charles Wheelock is not physically suited for heroic roles, but nevertheless wins sympathy.

Napoleon, anxious to popularize a new issue of five-franc pieces, puts an order for one million francs in one of the coins. Jean Villiars, one of the Emperor's favorites, leaves one of the five-franc pieces to his grandson Jean. This grandson, living in modern times, has invented a torpedo that can be steered by wireless. He lacks the money to present his idea to capitalists, and so considers an offer from Green, an unscrupulous promoter.

Margaret, Jean's sweetheart, advises him not to accept Green's proposal, so the promoter attempts to steal the torpedo model. He is electrocuted in the attempt. Margaret reads in a paper of Napoleon's hidden order, and discovers that the order is still good. She opens Jean's coin and finds the order, thus getting enough money to get married and to push the invention.

"The Masque of Life"

Originally released by the Signet Film and later by the Rogson Film Co., Inc.—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

"THE MASQUE OF LIFE," having been re-edited by James McKay was given a trade showing at the Broadway theatre, Thursday last, and in spite of its re-editing still retains the punch and the aroma that will be sure to boost it into popularity. The picture is strictly a state rights product and there cannot be any mistake to that. (This picture was fully reviewed in our issue of November 11).

Pete, the monkey, is there true to life. He performs some remarkable stunts, and though "almost" human, as he is declared to be, his many performances would stump almost any human, not merely from an acrobatic point of view, but from the viewpoint of intelligence or perhaps sagacity.

Rita Jolivet's "daring, desperate dash to death" (pardon the alliteration—she was a circus girl—) from the top of a smoke stack to be caught in a blanket held by a score of firemen, fills one's soul with dread, and her other escapades are surely heartrending.

It is a nicely balanced picture, and the miscarriage of the father's plans for vengeance, wherein the girl is shot and the circus hall is burned down again, provides much food for thrills.

The picture is a winner, and let us repeat—a great state rights proposition.

"The Stolen Triumph"

(Metro-Rolfe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

JULIUS STEGER has a medium of expression in this picture which enables him to get very close to the hearts of his audience. Many a tear will be wiped away. The first two thousand feet could have been condensed materially, but as present-day standards go, any audience will be willing to forgive this waiting suspense for what follows after. Once the action of the story really gets under way, there is no let up in interest.

Edwin Rowley and Stephen Hunt were college classmates. Edwin, the student, in after years has conceived the idea of becoming famous as a playwright. Stephen, born to luxury, is now a prosperous theatrical manager, and urged by an ambitious wife, has undertaken to write a play which he proposes to produce in his own theatre. The impecunious Edwin happens to think of his college friend's favorable position when he tries in vain to get some theatrical manager to even read his play, and goes to Stephen. Stephen, after reading the play and discovering what a masterpiece it is, changes the name, copies the original manuscript as his own and destroys it, telling Edwin he has mailed it to him. Losing his life's work, Edwin gives up all hope of ever reaching the desired goal, and takes the first work that offers to keep his little family from starvation.

Hearing of Hunt's much-heralded new play, Rowley gets a gallery seat and is startled to recognize in it his own masterpiece. Violent rage seizes him. He disturbs the performance and is thrown out. He pursues Hunt to his home and there accuses him before his wife, and is ejected as a madman. He then loses his job because he has failed to be on time during all this excitement, and returning home, the shock of all these circumstances kills his wife, who has been much weakened by privation.

Rushing out in the storm, Rowley blindly keeps on until he reaches the river, and there throws himself into the water. He is reported dead and for fifteen years wanders with mind an utter blank. In the meantime Stephen Hunt's wife investigates and learns of the suicide and the death of the wife and wrings a confession from her husband of his terrible crime. As the only possible atonement the Hunts adopt the little son of Rowley, and another play of the father is produced which wins greater fame than the one even that was stolen.

Returning to New York after years of wanderings, the announcement of this new play and the scenes suggested by the posters restore Edwin's mind, and the follows the traces of his former home and locates the boy with his new parents, the Hunts. He visits the grave of his poor wife, and there meets his son's bride-to-be, the Hunts' child, who tells him how hard her father and mother have tried to make amends for the great wrong done to him by kindness to his boy. A reunion and happy storation of love and confidence makes a happy and pleasing ending.

The outstanding feature of the above story is its naturalness. The expected happens all the way through without the usual tangles of fate which worry an audience unnecessarily. The return to New York, finding everything just as he had left it, tracing his boy to his new home because the landlady had remained in the same place all those years, were natural and happy circumstances. Quite out of the ordinary scenario style. The tremendously pathetic grief of the disappointed playwright and distracted husband and father are impossible to put into words, but the play is one of the most worth while seen this season.

Harry Burkhardt as Stephen Hunt, Clara Whipple as Mrs. Hunt, Clara Blandick as Mrs. Rowley, Raye Dean as Alice Hunt at twenty, and Helen Badgley as Little Alice, Edward Kenney as Edwin Rowley, Jr., and Maury Steuart as Little Rowley made a well balanced and fully competent cast.

"The Battle of Life"

(Fox Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE BATTLE OF LIFE" is a crook melodrama containing plenty of action, fistic encounters and shooting, served table d'hote. In it is the girl who tries to go straight and finally succeeds in doing so, but a hounding detective, a sneaking stool-pigeon and reprobate companions offer strenuous resistance, all of which leads to the melodramatic action. The picture is presented in workmanlike manner and is enacted capably by a cast headed by Gladys Coburn.

Mary, the daughter of a confirmed crook, startles her father and sweetheart one day by announcing that she is through with thievery. Through a display of heroism she secures a job as nursemaid in a well-to-do family, but she doesn't hold it long, as her father breaks into the house with intent to rob. She saves the day, but is discharged. In the meantime Dave, the sweetheart, is unsuccessful in his search for honest employment. The detective sees that he is always turned down. In desperation, Dave decides to "pull" a last job. He gets some jewels and hides them in Mary's clock. She finds part of the loot—a necklace—and Dave believes his partner in crime has double-crossed him. However, he lets it go and at last secures a position.

The detective gets on the trail of Dave's old partner and gives him only a few days' time in which to produce the necklace.

He accuses Dave of having kept it and the two engage in a fight. The crook is killed and then Dave discovers that Mary has the necklace. He places it on the dead man's body before the police arrive and, with the aid of false evidence, he manages to free himself of the murder charge. And then he goes straight for good, supposedly.

Miss Coburn does excellent work as Mary and Art Acord is seen to athletic advantage as Dave. The cast also includes Richard Neill, William Sheer, Frank Evans, Alex Shannon and Violet de Biccari.

"The Painted Lie"

(David Horsley-Mutual—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

A PICTURE of merit that bears its message showing that even the artist's craft is not immune from trickery and slander. Crane Wilbur as Lieutenant Grayton covers himself with glory both in military circles and outside, and Mae Gaston as Diana is entrancing in her simplicity. The photography in every instance is remarkably good and particularly is this so in the border scenes; one of a string of mounted horsemen in silhouette being especially worthy of comment. The subject treated, though old, is not hackneyed, and still has sufficient vitality to arouse and arrest the keenest interest.

Karl von Erric, an artist, volunteers to paint Diana's portrait. Her lover, Lieutenant Grayton, disapproves because he knows the man to be a moral leper, but Diana declares his fears are unfounded and also that she is able to care for herself. The picture in due course is finished, when the artist attempts to take liberties with Diana. She resents his attack, slaps his face and escapes from the studio.

The artist decides on keen revenge, and knowing that Grayton disapproved of the contract, decides to make his revenge double edged. He therefore gets Marcia (Marie Corteaux), his mistress, to pose in the nude for a picture to which he has already the head and shoulders of Diana and gives a private showing at the Damon Club. Grayton, of course, recognizes the features, and a duel is fought in which von Erric is wounded. Just prior to this, however, the artist has tried to rid himself of his mistress and she, naturally piqued at being so spurned, also seeks revenge. Under cover of darkness, therefore, she enters the artist's studio, and finding him lying down and not knowing of his having been wounded in a duel, stabs him and he dies.

In the meantime Grayton, now on the Mexican border, is served with a warrant for manslaughter. The detective who makes the arrest is saved from Mexican bandits by his prisoner, and on returning to the city Grayton is informed that Marcia, who was a suicide, had made a written confession of having killed von Erric.

And the "natural" ensues, Diana and Lieutenant Grayton are reconciled since the clouds of doubt are brushed away.

"The Rink"

(Mutual-Chaplin—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

CHARLEY CHAPLIN surely affirms his priority in comedy circles in "The Rink," his latest picture, for not only are the comedy situations ludicrously funny, but on roller skates his peer is not to be found.

Chaplin is first seen as a waiter in a high class restaurant, but "goes out to luncheon" and during this time visits the skating rink, where his gyrations mystify the other skaters, so that they draw off to one side to watch him. Then the fun commences. He charges into the mob and floors about half a dozen and a wild scurry follows by the enraged skaters to get his scalp.

Incidentally, he makes the acquaintance of Edna, a charming skater and she invites him to a skating party she is to give on a later date. He presents his card, which reads "Sir Cecil Seltzer, C. O. D.," and the young lady is proud to have a titled gentleman present. But when the guests are introduced, most of them recognize him as the erratic waiter of a few days previous, but "mum's the word" because a large percentage of them had visited this swell café in company with husbands and wives which were not their own.

So Charley Chaplin has the floor in every sense of the word and is permitted to parade his high sounding title. Just as things are running smoothly, however, he commences those antics so peculiarly his own, with the result that the whole personnel of the party at some stage of the proceedings is sent sprawling across the chalked floor. Then a wild scene ensues and the manner in which he glides in and out, forward and backward, falls and rises in a trice, dodges blows and trips his pursuers proves him a skater of no mean ability.

Admirers of Chaplin pictures will find this one of his best, if not his very best. Released Monday, December 11.

"Miss Jackie of the Navy"

(Mutual—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

IN this picture Margarita Fischer is very cute and clever. Her antics in a little compulsory service for Uncle Sam are most amusing. Silas Holbrook, her father, is a baked bean Croesus, and his friends are magnates of the pork packing variety. Nevertheless, Jackie prefers kitchen society, especially when the cook's son, a sailor, is visiting his mother.

While masquerading as a Jackie on board a United States cruiser she has some comical experiences which she carries off in the liveliest manner. Jackie is able to impose completely upon her shipmates, who, however, vote her a "sissy." From a queer little smile of the captain's it is inferred that he sees through the powder on her nose, but his genuine astonishment at the denouement dispels that idea.

After showing the white feather at a fire drill she is dreadfully mortified, but later, on a tropical island, she redeems herself in a daring attempt to rescue the captain from an inglorious death at the hands of some half wild negroes. Captain Crowne is strung up by the waist and left dangling as a tempting tidbit over a "Sacred Snake"—to whom nothing is sacred.

The story is bright and crisp—a sure cure for nervous depression. As a joke on Captain Crowne, who she has heard does not admire her loud bathing suits and other methods of advertising her charms, Jackie undertakes to deliver a letter to the captain that had been intrusted to the cook's son. Disguised as a sailor she goes aboard. While she is delivering the letter the boat sails and Jackie is compelled to take the journey.

The captain is commissioned to rescue from the natives of the island a professor and his daughter. He lands with a few men and a fight ensues in which the captain is soon captured with the rest. He is offered by the high priest as a sacrifice at the feast that has been interrupted by the rescuers. Jackie, in an attempt to save her friend, complicates matters by getting on the rope with Crowne and the two dangle disagreeably close to the ugly looking reptile beneath until the rest of the crew come to their aid.

Meanwhile the cook has confessed to the distracted parents her part in Jackie's disappearance. The captain shows his appreciation of Jackie's devotion in the usual manner. When going to see "Miss Jackie of the Navy" the answer to the question "Where shall we leave the children?" is: "Take them along."

"Mixed Blood"

(Red Feather-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN this Western release which comes from the hard-worked pen of Willard Mack there are the typical bar-room scenes, the typical games of chance pictured in the usual realistic way and the typical boss of the lawless town, but there is no typical hero and no typical heroine. A picture which exists throughout five reels without either such valuable character cannot rank with other subjects of like length and like character which present a hero that wins admiration at the start or a heroine who gets the sympathy.

Mr. Mack has also filled his story full of plotting, counter-plotting and counter-counter-plotting. The villains double cross one another time and again; to such an extent that the observer is altogether at sea as to the ultimate purpose of each character. And so in the end when Mr. Mack winds up with a happy finale for two of the characters, one wonders just why he picked those two. Any two of the others who died were just as good.

Consequently "Mixed Blood" narrows down to just a picture of the grim lawlessness of a western town. There are moments of suspense due to the plentiful introduction of gun-play and the fact that many of the scenes are staged within the radius of the gaming tables. These scenes and in fact all the others shown have been well directed by Charles Swickard. An atmosphere of convincing realism pervade them and they would be excellent indeed if the characters which they center about were molded to catch the observer's sympathy and admiration.

The main thread of the story, if one can single it out from its many companions, concerns itself with the efforts of the town sheriff to win the love of a woman whose father is a Mexican and whose mother is Irish. He is successful with the final scene but not until numerous villains and a villainess have been done away with.

The leads are taken by Claire MacDowell and Roy Stewart and the support comprises Wilbur Higby, George Beranger, Harry Archer, Jessie Arnold and Doc Crane.

Two Educational Single Reelers

("Hiyu Skookum Pow-Wow La Push" and "Oddities in Film Form")

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

OUR enthusiasm for Robert C. Bruce's scenic-comedies is still at its height. They are as remotely removed from the cut and dried topical as the feature release of to-day is from the feature release of four or five years since. Mr. Bruce procures scenes of everyday life that are flavored with just a little comedy. He has a sense of humor himself, as is shown in the subtitles and he makes you laugh when he want you to. Rather a nice ability, that.

As for the technical side of his pictures; that is little short of perfect. The camera work is superb. The artistic judgment displayed in choosing certain scenes is rare. A snow capped mountain or rolling waves beating on a desolate shore succeed in transporting the observer from his theatre chair to the real location in his mind's eye. And that is all anyone could ask.

"Hiyu Skookum Pow-Pow La Push" is Indian for something or other synonymous of "good time." For this picture Mr. Bruce took camera and cameraman to a remote spot off the northwest corner of the United States where a tribe of Siwash Indians abides. It was on the last Fourth of July when Mr. Bruce was there and the whole town turned out to celebrate the occasion with various athletic games. There is wrestling, racing and the walking of a greased pole, and distributed throughout the reel are some subtitles that bubble with humor. Mr. Bruce has frequent recourse to the Chinook language and explains it parenthetically in a delightfully funny fashion. No ordinary filler is this.

"Oddities in Film Form" is a "nut" picture according to Mr. Bruce. He has incorporated in it various "darn fool" stunts that certain people delight in doing. One of the scenes shows a fellow trying to motorcycle up a mountain side. Another scene which will set any house in roars of laughter is a group of "nuts" sliding down a muddy bank into a muddier mud hole. These and other pastimes which ordinary people seldom dreaem of doing, make the reel extraordinarily diverting.

"American Ambulance Field Service in France"

Three Parts—"Our Aviators," One Part (Daniel Frohman)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

THESE pictures shown at the Strand theatre Friday, December 8, under the management of Daniel Frohman, are among the best war films seen in this country. Introductions to the views are extracts from the letters of an ambulance driver. This promotes an intimacy with the men appearing on the screen and brings the war very near to home. The main purpose of the pictures is to excite sympathy and to make one's bank book feel burdensome.

Whole regiments, the defenders of France, in the full vigor of health are seen marching to the front. In strong contrast a pitifully small company, returning from V——— jog blithely by, their spirits apparently inextinguishable. Wounded polius are carried from the scene of action on the study backs of members of the ambulance corps. They are met by men drawn from ambulance carts which carry the injured to the field ambulances.

An entire village burnt to the ground by the invaders, shows vividly the trail of the war serpent. Prince George of Servia, Joffre and President Poincare are shown congratulating and thanking the Americans. Divine service on a canal boat is touching and impressive. Catholic priests and Protestant preachers forget their creeds, clasp hands and are just Frenchmen.

Near a dressing station, situated in a quarry, there is a small cemetery; it receives those who do not get beyond the first aid. Ambulances are seen running through a bombarded town. Windows of the hospital are barricaded to keep out flying shell fragments. A scene from "Carmen" is acted by the French soldiers behind the trenches to the delight of their comrades. A mosquito fleet of areoplanes, called the "Baby Neuports," that pave the way for the ambulance staff, is shown in operation with splendid effect.

These pictures should be seen by young and old, because the vivid scenes convey a definite idea of the work being done without close views of ghastly sights that afterward haunt the memory with chilling depression.

"A Dream or Two Ago"

(American-Mutual Star Production—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

THIS Mary Miles Minter production is superior in every respect to the star's preceding trio of Mutual releases. The story provided is stronger, more plausible, and wider in its appeal. It also has a number of humorous touches, an element lacking in other Minter vehicles.

The supporting cast is excellent, and this adjective also applies to the extra people, who were carefully chosen and drilled. Prominent in the support are Dodo Newton, Lizette Thorne, Clarence Burton, John Gough, and Orral Humphrey.

The director worked the story for all it was worth, getting the most out of each situation. He also kept the action going at a fast, uniform pace.

The sets and exteriors are appropriate, and the photography almost flawless.

Miss Minter has a most congenial role—one that enables her to display her personality to the best advantage. The film as a whole can be rated as being 100 per cent. better than "Faith" or "Youth's Endearing Young Charm," and as such ought to please practically any audience.

Millicent Hawthorne, the six-year-old daughter of a wealthy family, has everything in the world to make her happy, except an affectionate mother. Her mother's neglect finally causes Millicent to run away, and she is captured by Mother Gumpf, the leader of a gang of crooks. Millicent forgets her former luxurious life, and under the tutelage of Mother Gumpf, a female Fagin, becomes an expert pickpocket. In her light-fingered exploits she has many exciting and amusing adventures. She finally is noticed by Kraft, the manager of a disreputable cafe. Kraft engages her for his cabaret, and the girl does dances in the semi-nude.

A friend of the Hawthornes discovers Millicent's identity and informs her parents. Mrs. Hawthorne is overjoyed since her neglect of the child has broken her heart. The parents arrive at the cafe just in time to save Millicent from a locked room where Kraft has attacked her. Millicent is supremely happy in the love of her new-found mother.

"Social Pirates" and "Chased Into Love"

(Foxfilm Comedies—Two Reels Each)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THE main factors in successful comedy of the slapstick variety, namely stars, surprises extraordinary, and continuous performance without a moment's let-up, register strongly in the two first releases of the William Fox two-reel comedies.

"Social Pirates" is a burlesque on the plays with the melo thrill and Charles Arling as the "Master Mind of Crookdom" certainly keeps things crooked. Sending one of his minions to secure two false invitations to the D'Auber's grand reception he takes one of his men and attends the grand function en masse —for two more of his crooks do picket duty outside while the big boss is manipulating within.

Everything imaginable takes place, down to the appearance of one of D'Auber's models, creating a hair-tearing jealousy which diverts the attention of the guests, so that the big crook finds it easy to snipe his swag. Meantime the two external accomplices get locked into the house, by accident, and escape by a comical getaway under a lion rug.

Reel two keeps up the rapid fire series of surprises, including the sudden coming to life of a chicken in the hands of the cook, which with nothing but a few neck feathers to show what it is, flies in the faces of the assembled guests and causes a furore. A police raid and chase over roof tops winds up with the bursting of the water tank on the roof and a Niagara Falls of water, which washes everybody and everything, guests, furniture, banquet tables, down into the big sewer and out into the harbor, where they all arrive "In Soak." This denouement is the "real thing," equal to anything yet conceived of this character both in obvious cost and magnitude of the destruction, and in the real novelty of the idea.

"Chased Into Love" introduces Hank Mann as the featured star, with Charles Arling and Carmen Phillips, and a large supporting cast. The theme of this slapstick farce is a will, requiring marriage of the hero "at two o'clock." Various interferences make the keeping of the appointment impossible, and the irate father sets out to chastise the groom. In the meantime the groom has been through a variety of experiences introducing trick novelties. Some clever "business" is pulled, not strictly of the slapstick variety, but the final chase, in which even a fast flying chicken hawk, and a motor going a hundred miles an hour are beat out by the marathoners, furnishes a fast finish full of action. The big novelty of this chase is the evident use of a horse-race tread which gives the characters the real aspect of rapid motion, and by the use of double exposure and various tricks in both the taking and assembling of the film, quite unusual results are obtained.

If the new Fox product is to be judged by these first two pictures, the dearth of good slapstick comedies on which real money as well as ideas is spent, will be materially lessened. They are slapsticks, and as in all comedies of this sort so far produced, unexpected appearances of the leading stars with and without the usual amount of raiment are injected as part of the fun. But we would describe them as "clean" slapstick, in that no seriously objectionable vulgarity was in evidence, so that they should prove a drawing card in neighborhood and "family" theatres.

Novel Features Mark New Indiana Theatre

FORT WAYNE, Indiana, has its new Strand theatre. Fifteen thousand dollars were spent in the remodeling of the Empress theatre into the present house. On October 29 it opened to the public and has been well patronized ever since. It has a seating capacity of 1,200, plays at fifteen cents admission and shows Artcraft, Triangle and Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay productions. It is operated by the Rialto Amusement Company, which is composed of Margaret C., Frank L. and Arthur H. Nokes, and is managed by Thomas Olson.

The interior decorations and innovations are attractive. The music is provided by an orchestra, which is under the direction of Samuel M. Malanes. A fountain plays near the front of the stage, and there is a beautiful setting representing the Bay of Naples with the erupting volcano in the background.

Broadway Theatre, St. Louis, Rebuilds and Installs New Equipment

THE Rainbow theatre, 107 N. Broadway, St. Louis, Mo., which was one of the first Broadway theatres, closed its doors on November 15, to rebuild. Manager Angelich intends to spend about $15,000 in remodeling the theatre, $5,000 is to be spent on new equipment, and when finished the house will seat 500 instead of 369 as it does at present which will be a big item to the concern.

New seats, two Powers 6B machines with motors, Minusa screen and all other up-to-date equipment are being supplied by the Lears Theatre Supply Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Manager Angelich states that he can show by his books that the Rainbow theatre has made more money according to investment than any other theatre in the city, and that is some remarkable feat when we take into consideration the small capacity of his theatre and the opposition houses. It is hoped that the enlarged Rainbow will be ready to re-open during the month of December.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR BUSY EXHIBITORS

General Film Service

"The Menace." Episode of Grant, the Police Reporter, Series. (Kalem. Fri., Dec. 15.)—This is a thriller, depending on bomb throwing and police raids, and the capture of the female anarchist on the roof top to carry it through its thousand feet. An unusual feature is the showing of the Maxim silencer on the revolver of the hidden hand which deals death to the betrayer of the cause to Grant. Another novel stunt is the curious ball found in the pocket of the murdered man who told, which, on being broken, is found to contain an identification. Very good thriller.

"The Fatal Violin." Ham and Bud Comedy. (Kalem. Dec. 19.)—Bud Duncan and Henry Murdock are the stars of this piece de resistance. Ham is missing this week, but the fun goes on just the same. Some doings. Bud, after trying many jobs, tries to make a handy nickel by carrying grips from the station when allowed to do so. He finds some objection on the part of travelers to this generous service offered, so when the anarchist who is to bring the "fatal violin" arrives, he slips the violin case toward the nearest cab while its owner is looking for the comrades who are to meet him. Spying the violin, which is in a white case, the comrade mistakes Bud for the brother anarchist and a hot time ensues. Finally the violins get mixed, and the anarchists blow up themselves, while Bud suffers the tortures of the damned in the expectation that he was to get blown up. Really clever comedy, well worked up.

"The Midnight Express." (Kalem. Sat., Dec. 16.)—Helen Gibson pulls off some more of her daring stunts in this fast and furious reel. A train robbery is planned, in which a banknote shipment by the Weldon Express Co. in express boxes marked Am. Express Co., is taken from the train in suitcases by crooks who, instead of attempting a getaway, remain at Lone Point. Helen gets a thumb print of the robber, who sends a telegram from her office. The detectives attempt to arrest the robbers redhanded, but the bandits are too quick for them and cover an engine and cars with their revolvers and make the engineer and fireman turn over the train to them. Helen pursues on a motorcycle and does the most daring stunt we have yet seen. She rides down the middle of the track on the cycle, and suddenly, being confronted with a flat car, rides the machine up a narrow plank, leaps off while it is running at high speed along the top of the car, leaps from the car on to the rear of the passing train, and leaps into midair, what appears to be about ten feet after the train which appears to be going fully thirty miles an hour. It is all so plainly shown, the thrill is a real one, and we are wondering yet how it was done. We don't know whether there was any trick or not. We have never seen a better "stunt."

"The Vanishing Box Car." (Kalem. Dec. 23.)—This is another Helen Gibson stunt picture. This time some very clever railroad switching is introduced, showing a train broken in the middle and the caboose coupled to it again, without the engineer discovering that he had lost a car. Helen and her girl friend set out to find the car. A fight ensues, and Helen gets away on her motorcycle and brings help. Plot to wreck a factory and other realistic counterplots make this a full measure thriller of a thousand feet.

"The Five Franc Piece." (Selig. Three reels. Mon., Dec. 18.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Man He Might Have Been." (Selig. Sat., Dec. 23.)—This release is suitable for showing at a church fair or at a W. C. T. U. meeting, but its theme is too moralistic for popular consumption. The clothes worn by the players show that the picture was made some time ago, and the acting is of a kind equally out of date. Robyn Adair, Buddy Harris, and E. J. Brady are the principals. A hobo dreams of his youth, when he had a position of trust in the office of his rich father, and when he had a beautiful and loving wife. He then sees visions of the downfall drink brought, and how he lost wife and position through it. He goes back to his home, is forgiven by his wife, and starts life anew.

Selig-Tribune. No. 98. (Thurs., Dec. 7.)—Big shipment of meat arrives in Galveston, Texas from Argentina; picture theatres take potatoes at box office, New Orleans, La.; dancing hula-hula, Galveston, Tex.; U. S. dreadnoughts sail out of New York harbor; President Wilson and judges attend requiem mass for the late Emperor Franz Josef, Washington, D. C.; Secretary McAdoo and wife visit in Saratoga, Cal.; Mayor Thompson of Chicago presents poor children with tooth brushes; University of Pennsylvania defeats Cornell in football, Philadelphia, Pa.; and other scenes.

Selig-Tribune. No. 99. (Mon., Dec. 11.)—President Wilson officiates at ceremony of lighting Statue of Liberty, New York City; Charles Taft turns ranch into cotton plantation, Taft, Tex.; soldiers dine Thanksgiving day, Corpus Christi, Tex.; scenic boulevard opened to motorists, San Francisco, Cal.; Vice-President and Mrs. Marshall welcomed on arrival in Washington, D. C.; Berthier gun inspected, Wakefield, Mass.; world's largest gold dredge launched, Marysville, Cal.; automobile race, Los Angeles, Cal.; idiot attacks city officials, Hammond, Ind.; horses purchased for use at front, Denver, Col. fashions.

Mutual Program

"Reel Life." Gaumont, Mon., Dec. 11.)—"Where Benedictine" is made shows the bottling, case making, packing and shipping of the well known liqueur. "How to Dance," is a popular topic, particularly when it is demonstrated on the screen by a graceful couple to whom dancing seems to be a serious art. "Working for Santa Claus" will be a relief to those who imagined that toy makers are all fighting in Europe. This is another instance of reversed conditions. Instead of depending upon Germany and France for our toys, western factories are shown turning out enough Christmas delights not only for home use but for the little European war victims as well. Radium, so precious and costly, is seen seething in big cauldrons. Several tons of ore are used to produce a speck of radium that will lie in the palm of the hand.

"Up The Nile." (Gaumont, "Tours Around the World.")—Number six of the Tours shows the Nile from a modern vessel. The many sailing boats in the Cairo harbor look like a forest of masts. The cameraman with an eye for the unusual caught with good effect the curiously formed banks of the stream. The fine old world city of Carcassonne, with its splendid buildings, is also shown. Glimpses of Switzerland show some excellent photography; they include Lucerne, the birthplace and the statue of William Tell.

See America First, No. 66, and Komic Kartoons by Harry Palmer. (Gaumont. Split reel. Wed., Dec. 13.)—Ascending Mount Baker in the state of Washington is the theme treated in this number and apart from the educational features, it is very interesting and the photography is excellent. The glaciers, the waterfalls, the effect of the sun's rays on the different strata are beautifully depicted, and to see this picture convinces one that one really should "See America First." Harry Palmer's Komic Kartoon, "Curfew Shall Not Ring Out To-night," is a direct onslaught on our old friend "John Barleycorn," alias "The Demon Rum." He is jailed and is to be hanged when curfew rings. Therefore he—in the form of an animated bottle—decides to go to his own rescue. So with the liquid inside himself he burns down his prison bars, escapes and mounts to the belfry and swings from the bell's clapper. But the bellringer is slightly over enthusiastic this particular p.m., the result being that the bell is rung so violently that the victim is caused to lose his hold and is thrown far, far away into the night air.

Mutual Weekly. No. 102. (Gaumont.)—Interesting scenes from the Battle of the Somme; world's largest gold dredge, Hammonton, Cal.; wounded New Zealand soldiers on way home stop at Norfolk, Va.; illuminating New York's statue of Liberty, President Wilson attends; Berthier machine gun tested, Boston, Mass.; scenic boulevard opened, San Francisco, Cal.; Aviator M. Daucourt in France; President Wilson addresses congress; school children of Washington, D. C. taught thrift; and other scenes.

Universal Program

"Mixed Blood." (Red Feather. Five reels. Mon., Dec. 18.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue. This picture features Roy Stewart and Claire MacDowell in a story of rather too much plotting. It is a Western and contains some realistic scenes and considerable gun-play, but owing to the unattractive makeup of the characters fails to please to even an average extent.

"It Sounded Like a Kiss." (Nestor. Mon., Dec. 18.)—Two jealous couples and a bed room mixup make this a Nestor of average worth, although the tactics employed to produce the humor are more on the Joker than the usual Nestor style. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Priscilla Dean and Vola Smith, all have congenial parlor roles and appeared to good advantage under the direction of Louis Chaudet. Bess Meredyth prepared the scenario.

"Little Partner." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Dec. 19.)—A Western drama with a good many of the usual trappings of such pictures, done in a nice way and loaded down with a good bit of sentiment. The first reel might be shortened, and other places edited making the production an excellent two reeler. James Dayton is author, Calder Johnstone did the script and William Worthington directed. Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon are the leads.

"Shooting His 'Art Out." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 20.)—Comedy of the artist and model type in which the janitor (Phil Dunham) figures prominently. First laugh comes with subtitle "I'm going to shoot his "art out" as spoken by tenant of lower floor whose wife is addicted to visiting the artist via the dumbwaiter. The leaders are few and brief and a riotous finish on the roof of a Los Angeles skyscraper will cause gasps and giggles from any audience.

"The Ivy and the Oak." (Rex. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 21.)—A man-about-town renounces his actress-fiancee because of her past and marries a little country girl who later turns out to be extravagant and considerably vampirish. He robs a safe of some bonds to satisfy her desires, and then discovers the bonds belong to the actress. She refuses to prosecute him and so the man discovers which is the better woman. A fairly entertaining number with Lee Hill, Dorothy Davenport and Lillian Concord in the principal roles.

"In the Dead O' Night." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 22.)—Tense melodrama which really grips—Douglas Gerard, Doc Crane, Ruth Clifford and George Barranger as the old doctor, his ward and nephew, and the villainous friend. Two reels of continuous action which will be pleasing to most audiences and a knockout to the lovers of this kind of drama. Poison, forgery, convict garb, gunplay and bloodhounds help the plot.

"It's Great to Be Married." (Nestor. Fri., Dec. 22.)—Written by Capt. Leslie Peacocke, the plot permits the showing of a mature blonde in childish garb trotting about a Christmas tree, wheel her widowed parent is making up to wed Fred Church. This is the same Fred who aided "Broncho Billy" of Essanay for some years, and as a gay widow wooer he is quite different. Exploited by Mama as an eight year old, the brat entrusts to Fred the awful secret of her true age. As soon as he gathers that she is really eighteen and does some mental arithmetic, he weds "Baby Doll" leaving Mama at the post. The minister is the best actor and has the best part in this one reeler.

"Jags and Jealousy." (Joker. Sat., Dec. 23.)—This Joker has to do with a jealous husband and a wife who innocently gets in compromising situations. A story of the better-than-average sort gives this a good amount of sustained interest, although the business of the players is rather hackneyed. William Franey, Gale Henry and Charles Conklin are the leads.

"Fighting Joe." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Dec. 23.)—Featuring William V. Mong as a careless scrapping miner who has no plans or fears as to the future, and is loaded with gall and money. Descending upon the border town just before Christmas, he cheers up the church and saloon folks equally by spending generously in each place and promoting about the best rough-house bottle-flinging controversy yet screened. Later he turns toward the city and does some tenement heroic stuff ably aided by a precocious youngster named Bud Missinger. A mother is rescued from the brutal father of Bud, and the return to the wilds is a feature of the church people's Christmas entertainment there. Mr. Mong enacts a peculiar character in this picture which has many novelties.

"Mr. Vampire." (Rex. Two reels. Sun., Dec. 4.)—Directed by Francis Ford and written by Grace Cunard, this picture seems to have suffered in the cutting room or somewhere after leaving the producer. The first half threatens a good burlesque of the broker-in-love-with-every-woman-but-his-wife drama, but with the jumping of twenty-five years to show Francis Ford as the son of the broker who was not so crazy about his wife (in the beginning) the drama starts. Ford is introduced by a leader as one who hates all women because of his mother's attitude toward her husband's many affinities. He promptly involves himself with affairs with every woman who comes within range of his vision, showing nothing but affection for the sex! A week or two in a friend's house he spends wooing the family female, and being pursued by a mad resident male. Ford finally finds the girl is his enemy's sister instead of his wife and marries her before recovering from his amazement.

Pathe Exchange

"A Day of Sport." (Florence Rose Fashion Series. Number 11. Split reel.)—This reel combines a series of pretty views with the usual fashions in feminine attire. Betty, the featured model, goes visiting at the country club, watches a fox hunt, plays golf and enters upon various other sports which afford opportunities for the display of smart costumes. On the same reel with "Some Little Animals."

"Some Little Animals." (Pathe. Split reel.)—This short piece of film, done in color, follows after "A Day of Sport" and shows kittens, porcupines, squirrels, ferrets, foxes, bears and other animals in characteristic scenes.

"Luke Locates the Loot." (Rolin.)—This is a burlesque on the detective picture and possesses its Clutching Hand and its Ken Craigedy as features. Luke is a dectective's assistant, but when a hurry call comes in for the boss to attend a masque ball and locate two crooks who are stealing everyone's jewels, he goes himself. He gets into various mixups there and the arrival of his boss makes things worse for him. This makes a fair comedy, although Luke and his able associates have done better.

Pathe News. No. 99. (Sat., Dec. 9.)—Gold dredger in use, Marysville, Cal.; Ambassador Gerard sails for Germany from New York City; stock show, Oakland, Cal.; David Lloyd George, England's new Premier; Italians acclaim themselves pro-Ally, Rome, Italy; Sir John French visits aviation camp on western front; animated cartoon; fishing industry, Southport, N. C.; soldiers drill, San Diego, Cal.; President Wilson attends to various duties in Washington, D. C.; and other scenes.

Metro

"Duplicity." (Drew Comedy.)—One idea is amplified into a thousand feet of refined comedy. The wife agrees to take a vacation at Atlantic City, but after all it seems too bad to leave hubby all alone and then—hubby might find a "cousin" of feminine gender who would interrupt the present connubial bliss. So wifey disguises, with cork, as the colored servant and remains. But hubby is wise, through the accident of overhearing wifey and the cook explain the plan, and he refuses to eat, and sits gloomily before his wife's photo in a convenient portable frame which he carries about with him. Wifey, overcome with delight at his faithfulness throws off the disguise, and never knows how she has been fooled. The one little joke carries its idea with variations, subtle variations, through a thousand feet of film.

Exhibitors' Personals

MICHIGAN.—Flint: Charles Garfield, formerly special road representative in Michigan for the Standard Film Service and who has managed theatres in Ohio, has taken full charge of the Orpheum theatre. Rex Minkley is now in charge of the Lyric theatre.

Detroit: The Rosedale theatre, 2394 Woodward avenue, is to be enlarged to 2,000 seats. The additional 900 seats will be on the main floor, making the Rosedale the largest north-end theatre for motion pictures. The Rosedale is owned by William F. Klatt, who operates other Detroit theatres. All ten-cent seats at the Rosedale have been eliminated on Sundays and holidays, and the change is proving most satisfactory.

Cheboygan: R. B. Riggs, who now manages the Liberty theatre, is having plans prepared for a new house seating about 700.

Coldwater: The Venetian theatre is now under the management of Dennis Vaines, who formerly owned it.

Sault Ste. Marie: F. D. Beardsley, who owns the Temple theatre, is now the owner of the Star.

Owosso: A new theatre is to be erected by Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, well-known residents.

OHIO. — Middletown: George Jenewein has leased the Grand theatre. Arnold Skinner has retired from the management.

Bellefontaine: The Majestic theatre has been leased to Antonio Silvestri, who took hold on November 15. He is a nephew of Daniel Gutilla, who formerly controlled the house.

Youngstown: The Strand opened simultaneously with the opening of the Tod House, and the fact that it so closely adjoins the main entrance of the new hotel should prove a mutual benefit both to the theatre and the big hostelry, as it will furnish the patrons of the hotel with first class screen amusement within a few steps of their stopping place.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Philadelphia: Charles P. Will has conveyed to Albert W. Robinson the motion picture theatre and stores at the southeast corner of Germantown and Tulpehocken streets, subject to a mortgage of $30,000. Robinson has given to the Glenside Building Association a mortgage of $10,000 on the theatre which is assessed at $40,000. It occupies a lot 87 by 100 feet. Smith Hardican Company, Stacy Reeves and Sons, Lam Building Company, George Hogg Construction Company and Conneen Construction Company estimated on revised plans for a theatre to be built at Broad and Erie avenue. Henon and Boyle are the architects, representing the Great Northern Theatre Company.

Chester: A new $100,000 motion picture theatre will be built at Fourth and Edgmont avenue. All the property on the west side of Edgmont avenue between Third and Sixth streets was recently acquired by the Edgmont Avenue Improvement Association, a million dollar association of business and professional men. This association will widen the thoroughfare, on which it is purposed to build the theatre and make it an up to date business street.

WISCONSIN.—Milwaukee: There have been a number of changes in the managements of the various down town houses during the last week. Walter Hildebrand for the past six months or more in charge of the Butterfly theatre has resigned that position to take charge of the Toy theatre, which has been recently purchased by J. B. Olinger, owner of the American theatre. Mr. Olinger intends to remodel the Toy and change its name. About $5,000 will be spent on the remodeling it is said. L. Landau, formerly of the Regent and Royal theatres in Kansas City has succeeded Mr. Hildebrand at the Butterfly. Tom Lee, formerly at the Toy, has gone to Fond du Lac, where he takes charge of the Henry Boyle theatre.

CANADA.—

British Columbia: The Knights of Pythias Lodge No. 23, of Trail, has decided to erect a theatre building to cost $20,000 on a piece of ground 75 by 100 feet which is owned by the lodge. N. M. Trafton, a member of No. 23 and head of the O-Row-Nay circuit of theatres, will lease the building on its completion and will conduct it in conjunction with his other houses.

IOWA.—Early: The Opera House, C. J. Kelly, manager, burned to the ground the other day. Kelly promptly started his theatre on the second floor of a store building, and within a few days workmen were busy on a new opera house.

KANSAS.—Severance: A new moving picture theatre, called the Opera House, was recently opened by Messrs. Dixon and Ebeling of that place.

Cheboygan: R. B. Riggs, now operating the Liberty, plans to open a new theatre that will seat 700.

Wolverine: Cady and Goldfarb will soon open a new theatre for motion pictures.

Birmingham: E. R. Keef has taken over the Temple theatre. He has opened the theatre on Sundays with good results. Previously Birmingham had no Sunday picture shows.

NEVADA.—Winnemuca: The new American theatre, being erected by Meskimmons and Foster for H. O. Oastler and C. W. Muller, is rapidly nearing completion and will be one of the finest houses in Nevada. A heating and ventilating plant is being installed and the equipment will be high grade throughout. Two Powers Cameragraphs have been purchased by the owners, who selected the entire equipment in San Francisco.

Fallon: W. J. Gordon has taken over the Temple theatre and pavilion and is installing a heating and ventilating system, besides making other marked improvements.

OHIO.—Cleveland: The Jennings, a 1,000-seat house at West 14th street and Fairfield avenue, S. W., opened recently. Thomas Urbansky is owner and manager.

MUSIC

CO-OPERATION spells success—the more we help each other by the interchange of ideas, the nearer we come to the 100 per cent. efficiency point. Every man in every walk of life has certain branches of his own business in which he is more proficient than his neighbor, yet he is not sufficiently enlightened on the whole subject to get perfect efficiency out of it. This is the condition in the exhibiting end of the picture industry, as all will admit; therefore let us co-operate by expressing our individual ideas in detail. The following deals with one of the most important subjects in the business—MUSIC.

The Editor,
Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.,
Dear Sir:

UNDER the head of "Keep the Ball Rolling," I would like to put in my oar on the question of music for pictures. From an experience of fifteen years on a piano stool, I have a few suggestions to offer exhibitors which they may find to be of interest.

MUSIC, if we look to the dictionary for a definition, is a combination or series of tones pleasing to the ear and appealing to the emotions. It appeals to all ages, races and classes, and speaks a language all can understand. But it must be music—not noise—to do this. The scraping and blaring of a cheap orchestra—the din of an improperly handled organ—the pounding of a rattley, out-of-tune piano—they are not music. They drive the better audiences away and set people's teeth on edge. Good music will draw—bad music, or rather noise, will have the opposite effect.

MANY exhibitors seem to miss the idea of what their music should do. In many theatres it distracts the attention of the audience away from the pictures through either being poor in quality or inappropriate. There seems to be a continual battle between the music and the play on the screen for the attention of the audience. The wise exhibitor appreciates the fact that the play on the screen is telling a story—is entertaining his audience by appealing to their emotions, and that the right kind of music works in harmony with the pictures, appealing to the same emotions at the same time, thereby strengthening the effect of the play. Many of his patrons may not be musicians enough to know why a certain picture took such a hold on them, but they do know that it was "a great picture," and will come again.

AS a "horrible example" of inappropriate music, let me here mention a picture I saw not long ago of an Indian attack upon a party of pioneers and their prairie schooners. The picture was excellent—story, acting, scenery and directing—but what jarred on my nerves was the fact that during the attack on the camp the orchestra was valiantly whanging away on selections from the opera of "Carmen," spoiling the whole effect of a well-worked-out picture. And they probably thought they were adding to the reputation of the theatre by playing "classic" music, even if it did not fit the picture.

IN selecting his music, an exhibitor should take as much pains as he does when making a selection of his program or projecting machine. No music at all would be better than the stuff ground out in many houses.

IF an orchestra, get the best violinist you can afford, preferably a man, for women rarely possess the strength of character necessary to make really good instrumentalists; then let him select his own orchestra and hold him responsible for results. Let me say here that the piano should not lead—the first violin is the logical leader of an orchestra. Pay your leader enough so he can be constantly adding to his repertoire, for he needs a large musical library, covering every conceivable kind of music, and many numbers of each kind.

IF a piano alone, again get the best man you can—one that has the dramatic instinct in him strong and with the rare though necessary ability to improvise, for while "set pieces" may be correct for weeklies, scenics, comedies, etc., when it comes to playing for dramas, particularly the big features, he must draw from the operas, oratorios, concert numbers, songs, in fact from every source he can and then mold the whole into a symphony that is worth listening to. Hunt for such a man, and when you get him pay him well and he will bring and hold business. But in the name of common sense give him a good, brilliant piano and keep it well in tune and repair. A good workman is worthy of good tools and cannot be expected to do good work without them.

WHEN it comes to an organ, your problem is bigger yet. A regular church organ is out of the question for a picture theatre. It is constructed to develop religious sentiments, and people prefer their religion on Sundays, not in a theatre where they go to be entertained. There are several good orchestral organs on the market now, built for orchestral effects, and, in the hands of a man who understands his business, the musical possibilities are almost unlimited. Get an instrument in which the violin and cello stops sound like real violins and cellos, and the same with the piccolos and flutes. You want orchestral effects, not a sample of Coney Island on a busy day.

THE man for this instrument must be bigger yet, for he should be a good pianist, a good organist, possess some knowledge of orchestral instruments, thoroughly understand his organ, and, like the pianist, possess the gift of improvisation. Then you will hear music that will lift you off your feet. But beware—most organists play too loud. They have a tendency to let out, just because the volume is there. Don't let them do it. A big organ is deafening unless it is kept within bounds. There is such a thing as even too much music.

ANENT organists, I have in mind a certain excellent, European trained organist and orchestra director who was spoiled for good work by being compelled to use mostly "popular songs" on his program. I am not advocating music over the heads of the averaged audience, but only a relatively small percentage of people want "popular songs"; the majority want to hear music worth listening to. Witness the marked improvement in the class of music played at band concerts nowadays.

I'M going to close this rather long letter with an appeal for a square deal for your musicians, whatever instruments they may play. Musicians are bundles of nerves. If they are not, they are not musicians, they are merely musical mechanics. They

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

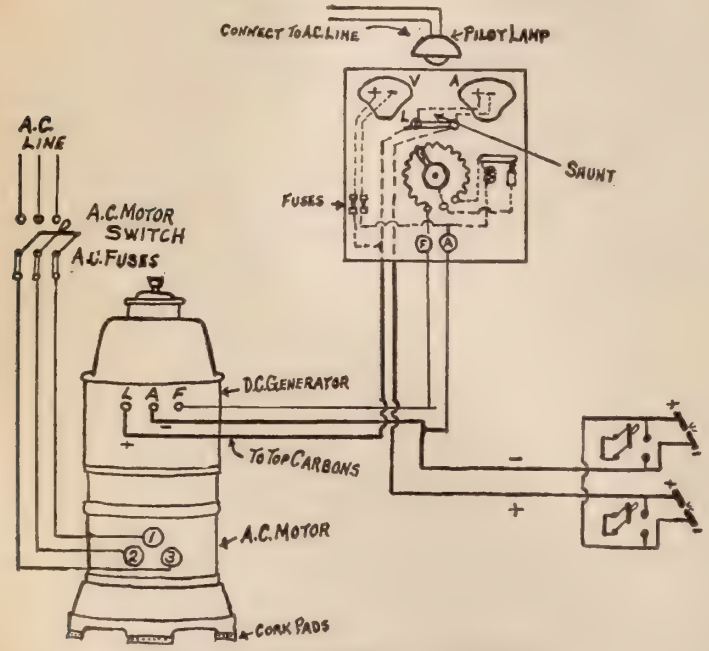
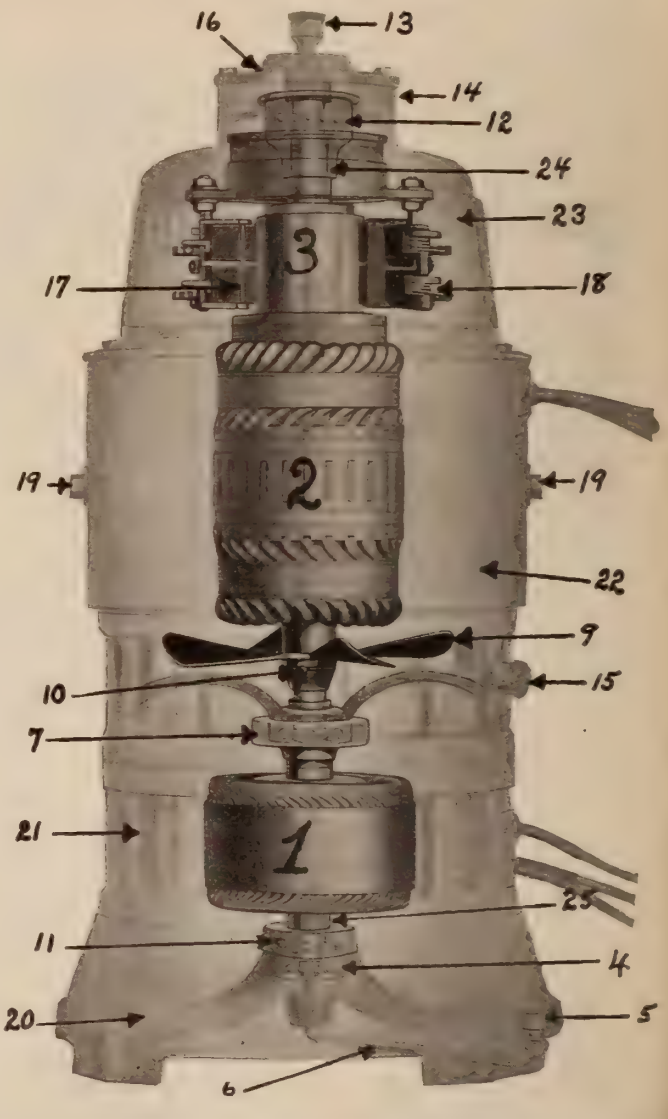
A B C of the Operating Room

ON my visit to Cleveland during the summer months I had the extreme pleasure of being shown through the extensive plant of the Hertner Electric Co., arriving in Cleveland on Saturday, which was right in the midst of the Saturday half holiday season, I was indeed fortunate in finding someone willing to give me the information I was seeking.



To C. D. Cookingham, who sacrificed his afternoon off and who so courteously and painstakingly explained the construction and operation of the Transverter, I extend my sincere thanks.

The "Transverter" is really a wonderful machine for rectifying alternating current; the main idea being to embody in a machine that will occupy a very small floor space, one that will deliver a constant current in spite of the variations in voltage, and this the Hertner people have accomplished.



The device is small, well constructed, and of the vertical type, and occupies a floor space of only 18 inches owing to the base of the machine being round. The height of the machines vary from 33 inches in the smaller capacity machines to 45 inches in those of 75 ampere capacity.

The machines are well ventilated, and are nicely balanced, which prevents any undue vibration, those I have seen were so finely balanced that it was possible to stand a penny, on edge, on the grease cup at the top of the machine while running without causing it to lose its balance, which I consider a very good test for vibration and rigidity. Of course, the weight of the machine is considerable, and this also helps to prevent vibration. The construction of the brush holders are of the type generally used on electric automobiles, and other type generators; there are two of these brush holders and two sets of brushes, the tension of which is regulated by means of the usual finger and coil spring arrangement with two notches which give two different degrees of pressure. The brushes are the best procurable and have a copper pig tail which prevents the temper from being drawn out of the springs by any overloading of current.

Wiring Diagram of Double Arc Transverter

There is an interpole adjustment which allows the machine to be operated without any sparking at the commutator. These interpoles are so arranged as to be adjustable with regard to the main poles of the machine, and are only to be used at the factory when making the test and adjustment. Operator should bear this in mind, otherwise he will get himself into a lot of trouble that could have been avoided. Do not interfere with this adjustment. It is not necessary, for when the machine leaves the factory it is in the best possible adjustment.

The Cabinet panel "A," Fig. 1, has the Generator Field Regulator enclosed in a steel cabinet on the face of which is mounted a Voltmeter and Ammeter with Pilot Light above them. These meters are of great assistance to the operator in making the necessary adjustments for amperage and correct arc voltage.

Panel "B," Fig. 2, has in addition to the Field Regulator and Meters a pair of heavily constructed quick-break switches enclosed in the lower part of the panel. These switches are for the purpose of cutting off the current from individual arc lamps.

The range of adjustment of current above and below the rated capacity of the machine, and which is taken care of my means of these regulators, which are shunt wound, is ample to take care of any variation in the density of the film.

With the "Transverter" it is possible to burn two arcs simultaneously, each arc drawing 50 amperes, and the generator only supplying a total of 50 amperes and 50 volts, but this means simultaneously not CONTINUOUSLY. The machine should not be called upon to furnish more than its rated capacity for more than a short period of time, as the overload will cause the machine to become unnecessarily overheated.

There is a rather peculiar mode of wiring, when two arcs are supplied with the one Transverter, which is shown in the wiring diagram accompanying this article, Fig. 3, which is a wiring diagram of a three phase double arc "Transverter."

Now for a description of this machine that is meeting with such general favor wherever used. In Plate "A" we have a phantom view of the "Transverter" and by means of line drawings illustrate the various working parts, which are referred to by numerals.

1 is the alternating rotor of the armature; 2 the direct current armature, and 3 the commutator. There is, at the bottom of the armature shaft what is known as a thrust bearing, or in other words a ball-bearing consisting of a steel housing which contains the hardened steel balls upon which rests a flat topped cone, also of hardened steel, into which the end of the armature shaft is placed, and which carries the weight of the rotor and holds the end of the shaft central on this thrust bearing 4 by bearing 11, which is called a radial bearing. This arrangement reduces the wear and trouble to a minimum. The small tube at 6 connects with this bearing and through it is forced the grease contained in grease cup 5, and right here I want to call attention to the advice of the manufacturers, that you either purchase your grease directly from them or else be quite sure that the grease you do purchase from other sources is free from acid, otherwise you are running the risk of doing considerable harm to the delicate ball bearings. I think the grease mentioned in another column, manufactured by Leonard Ruess, will just about fill the bill. The alternating current rotor 1, is slotted on the surface, and through these slots are drawn the copper wires forming a mass at either end. This mass is then acetylene welded into such a solid mass as to prevent any great heat from affecting it. Above the rotor is another radial bearing, 7; the alternating rotor and the D.C. armature are carried on sepaarte shafts joined together by a keyed steel coupling, 10, which has mounted upon it a fan, 9, which sucks the air in and around the alternating current rotor, and forces it up through and past the D.C. windings and armature, assuring good ventilation. Bearing 7 tends to steady the two shafts where they are joined together, reducing vibration and eliminating the strain on coupling 10. The Direct Current armature, 2, needs little description, as it is built up in the usual way, having at its upper end the commutator 3, the bars of which are of hard drawn copper with undercut insulation, for which the manufacturer claims it is a practical impossibility for these bars to work loose. Should they do so, however, means have been provided for tightening them up. When it becomes necessary to renew the commutator, or have it resurfaced, the process of disassembling and reassembling is quite simple. At the upper end of the machine, we find radial bearing, 12, which steadies the upper end of the D.C. armature shaft, which is lubricated by means of grease cup, 13. Top 16 is easily removable by taking off the hexagon headed screws, when by removing the top bearing, 12, may be lifted out after first removing the cap ring, which has two ears on its upper surface. Under cap 16, and over the top of bearing, 12, is a reservoir which serves to regulate the flow of grease, so that it is impossible to supply too much which might find its way into the commutator, thus causing great damage. The D.C. brushes, 17, are of the best quality. 23 is the lower part of the top casting, while 21 is the lower casting which carries the A.C. pole pieces as well as forming the D.C. armature field. 18 shows the tension springs holding the brushes in position and the means of adjusting their tension. 19-19 are the studs which hold the inter-poles, and it is these studs that are not to be readjusted by the operator; all necessary adjustments are made at the factory. 15 is the grease cup for bearing, 7; 25 the A.C. armature shaft and 20 the base casting. A study of this illustration will show the simplicity of design and the careful workmanship that has entered into its construction throughout.

An interesting photograph of a 60-ampere arc at 55 volts is shown in fig 4 and your attention is called to the length of arc, showing an ideal crater formation and the great volume of light being directed to the point where it is needed—that is, the condensers.

All in all the Transverter can be summed up as being a machine whose efficiency compares favorably with any other device of its kind on the market, and exhibitors who desire efficiency will do well to examine further into the merits of this device.

British Operators Must Be Capable

EXAMINATION of motion picture operators by the British Columbia provincial authorities, as provided for in the amendment to the Moving Pictures Act, is now under way, and the men in central and eastern towns of the province have already been put through the test. Robert Foster and William A. Oswald, members of the board, have recently returned from a trip covering a large number of towns, and will leave in the near future for a trip covering northern British Columbia. Examinations for the city of Vancouver will start on December 12, at the examining board's new quarters in the Court House.

Mr. Foster states that there has recently been a great improvement in operating knowledge and practice, particularly since it was announced a few months ago that the provincial examinations would be held at this time.

Under the classification decided upon, Vancouver is the only city of the first class in British Columbia, while other cities and towns are placed in the second, third and fourth class; and no operator can work in a town of a higher class than the one in which he was examined, without taking another examination to determine his qualifications. Those who fall below a mark of 65 in the examinations now being held will not be granted a license, but may be examined again during the early part of 1917. Those gaining a mark of 65 to 75 will be granted a provisional license good until next May, at which time they must qualify with a higher mark.

Portable Lighting Plant

THE Universal Motor Company, Oshkosh, Wis., in order to meet the demand for a compact portable electric lighting plant have brought out a self-contained set as shown in the accompanying illustration.

The outfit consists of a regular 4 cylinder, 4 cycle engine, with ignition equipment, enclosed governor, carbureter, gasoline tank, etc. The radiator and fan is mounted as an integral part of the machine, as you will see by the illustration. The engine is connected direct to a 4 K.W. generator; the armature which takes the place of the fly wheel makes the outfit compact and recommends it for portable work.

The generator is of the six pole type and can be supplied in either 60 or 110 volt sizes, but it is recommended that the 60-volt size be used on account of its being the best adapted to motion picture work as this is the proper voltage for the arc. However, where the 110-volt outfit is used a rheostat can be placed in series with the arc reducing the voltage to 60 while the rest of the line remains at 110.

The normal speed is 1,100 revolutions per minute, and this speed is maintained by a sensitive governor operating directly upon the throttle holding the speed uniform regardless of the load, and as the governor is of the throttling type it regulates the flow of fuel, according to the load. The arcs operate without flicker, which gives an attractive light for the projection of motion pictures. These plants are used largely by the United States and foreign governments, as well as by schools and churches. The above illustration shows one of these outfits mounted on an automobile truck and used by the North Carolina State Board of Health, for the purpose of educating the people living in the rural communities as to the things to do and avoid if they are to maintain perfect health.

The outfit weighs 480 pounds without the radiator and takes up but little room, and being of large capacity allows a good margin for handling electric signs, house lighting and driving of small motors in addition to the picture arc, and as it is possible to use as fuel either gas, gasoline or kerosene, this generator set should make a strong appeal to traveling exhibitors as well as others who have need of a portable lighting plant.

Copper Wire Rheostat

H. W. Barber, Milwaukee, Wis.: "Is it possible to use copper wire in the construction of a rheostat, and what size wire should be used?

Answer: At first I thought you were trying to "kid" me, but your question is deserving of an answer, so here goes: it is possible, but not practical. Owing to the fact that on account of the low resistance of copper it would be necessary to use a very great length of wire to obtain the resistance required for an arc lamp that the cost would be quite considerable, and the quantity of wire would be so great, and the weight also, which would take up more space than the standard type of rheostat now in use, making it more difficult to handle. It is also a well known fact that copper deterioriates very quickly when subjected to any great heat. And voltage is where we get the heat form as applied to rheostats. Another point to be considered is that the resistance of copper wire increases as the temperature rises, thus making a rheostat constructed of copper wire unreliable and difficult to handle.

I do not believe you would care to make such a rheostat after reading the above, but should you, I will try and give you the information necessary to do so. Would be pleased to hear from you again.

Noisy Gears

A. W., Rochester, N. Y.: "The gears of my machine, when the framing lever is set central, grind. This has been worrying me for some time, and I have held back from writing you for the reason that I was afraid you would publish my name, and there are a number of operators here who, when they find out that another is seeking information, try to discourage them, and set them up to ridicule. But I would much rather submit my questions to you and have your assistance than be under any obligations to the other members of the craft in this city. Thanking you in advance for any suggestion you may make, and with best wishes to the Motion Picture News, and yourself, I am one of your steady readers.

Answer: In the first place, the department will not publish names of its correspondents when requested not to do so. The purpose of this department is to be of all possible assistance to the operator and not to set them up to ridicule, although I think you are rather hard upon the other operators in your city, for if you are a member of the Union, and I presume you are, it should be their aim to assist a brother in any way possible, making each member a credit to the organization, and assuring their employers —the exhibitor—that it is the Union men who are best fitted for the important work which they are called upon to perform. I appreciate your kind words regarding my humble efforts, and hope that you will continue to be one of the "steady readers" of the News, and that you may derive some good through reading the Projection Department.

Now to answer your question: The cause for the grind is probably due to the small toggle gear, located between the fly wheel pinion and the back gear being too tight against one of the other gears, this might be caused by dirt collecting and packing into the teeth of the gear causing it to swell, or in other words bind. Remove fly wheel and take out this toggle gear, clean it and the other gears by using a tooth brush, or a small typewriter brush which has strong bristles, and if you use kerosene it will loosen all of this dirt and no doubt be the cure for your trouble. If the gear has become badly worn I would suggest that you send in to the factory for a new one, the installation of which will only take a few minutes.

Wants Books on Projectors

James D. Miller, Thompsonville, Conn.: Will you please be kind enough to inform me where I can get instruction books on the ——— and ——— machines, also the cost?

Answer: In regard to these instruction books, I have taken the matter up with the manufacturers of the machines you mention, and you will receive the books in a few days. There is absolutely no cost, as this department is trying to be of "service."

Would like to have photographs of your operating room, and a letter setting forth in detail the equipment you are using.

Perfect Arc Control

F. H. Richardson, well-known authority on motion picture equipment says of the

TransVerteR
TRADE MARK. REGISTERED. U. S. PAT. OFF. JULY 25, 1916

While in Cleveland I witnessed a remarkable demonstration of the ability of this machine to maintain constant current at variable arc voltage. We set the arc working at 50 volts, 50 amperes * * * there was no appreciable change at all in the amperes until the voltage had mounted to 80, whereupon I turned the arc to, amazing as the statement may seem, approximately 1¼" in length without the slightest change taking place in the amperage delivery, and the arc did not break. * * *

"Although there were two perfect arcs and the illumination was not appreciably affected on the first machine, still the ammeter read 50 amperes, so that we had two arcs, each drawing 50 amperes, with a generator only furnishing a total of 50, and with an arc voltage at either machine of 50. * * *

"I can recommend the Transverter to the careful consideration of the moving picture theatre manager and operator."

Can you do this with your present equipment? If not, you should not be satisfied. Send for descriptive literature and latest price bulletin.

Increased Throw Will Increase Size of Picture

Martin Brown, Iowa: "We are having our theatre remodeled and would be very grateful to you if you would inform us as to the following: Our throw is now 85 feet, but after the remodeling, the operating room will be five feet further back, making the throw 90 feet. Will this make any great difference in the size of the picture? Please publish answer as soon as possible.

Answer: In placing the operating further away from the screen it will have a tendency to make the size of your picture larger. How much so I am unable to tell you as you failed to state size of your present picture or the E.F. of the projection lens. And again I wish to call the attention of correspondents to the fact that it is impossible to give half way intelligent answers to questions unless all possible information is contained in your letters.

The method for determining the size of pictures for your purpose is as follows: Divide the width of your picture, in inches, by the throw, in inches, and you will have the spread of light in inches, or fractions of an inch to each foot of throw. Multiply this by five which is the added length of throw and the result will give you the added width of your picture in inches. The height may be found in the same way; simply substitute height for width and proceed as before which will give you the added height of picture at the longer throw.

Film Tears at Intermittent Sprocket

Herman Friday, New York State: "What is the cause for film to tear at the intermittent sprockets? This trouble, something that has never happened to me before, is surely getting my "goat." I have been operating my machine for over a year now, and never had any trouble until lately, and now when a film is received that is not in perfect condition (and I do not have time to examine the reels before the show begins) owing to bad patches, etc., the film catches on the intermittent sprockets and tears off the strip of film in which are the sprocket holes, and this strip wraps around the sprocket. What can you suggest as a remedy?

Answer: Answering your last question first, would say the only remedy is to get a new sprocket. It is evident that the sprocket has become greatly worn, and may be badly undercut, which you can find out by using a magnifying glass and looking at the teeth of the sprocket.

This condition will cause the film to rip and tear, and also cause the picture to jump up and down on the screen if it does not force you to shut down the machine altogether. When you realize that the intermittent movement is the heart of the projector, and the great strain that is placed upon the intermittent sprocket, you can readily see why it is advisable to install a new one as soon as the old one shows signs of wear. Some recommend a new sprocket every six months, while others say that three months is a good life for an intermittent sprocket, but the life depends upon the work it is called upon to perform, and that is why I suggest a careful examination of the intermittent sprocket in particular at least once a week, remembering that the other sprockets, too, should be kept in good condition and not allowed to become badly worn at the teeth.

Wants to Stop Condenser Breakage

Martin B. Ellis, Coshocton, Ohio: "Is there any way to stop condenser breakage? I understand there is on the market a device that can be attached to the picture machine that will do this. Any information will be greatly appreciated.

Answer: There is, I believe, a device manufactured or invented by a man by the name of Preddy, who claims that with the use of his special mount condenser breakage can be eliminated. His address I do not know. Can any of my readers help me by giving me this information?

Address of Billy Hopkins Wanted

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company is very anxious to get in touch with Billy Hopkins, the man who made some special features for the Animated Weekly. It is requested that Mr. Hopkins, or one of his friends who knows his address, communicate with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 1600 Broadway, New York City, as soon as possible.

AS we live, we learn—as we learn, we advance—advancement means we are moving with present day developments.

SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS were conceived by Mr. J. S. Speer, better known as the "Carbon King," and assisted by an able corps of engineers and carbon experts, they have been developed—improved—bettered—perfected, until today they are unsurpassed in quality or service.

EXPERIMENTS were made; tests conducted; carbon manufactured and the entire idea fostered several years ago. The great European War, however, placed the motion picture industry on the brink of despair. The situation became serious—immediate action was necessary—SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS saved the day.

TO relieve this alarming condition, a new factory had to be erected, special machinery designed, inexperienced hands employed, and the carbons placed upon the market within a few months.

CONDITIONS such as these left little time for refinement, polish or elegance. Quality was established from the first, but the smaller details had to be left for a later day development.

NOT content to manufacture a carbon that would satisfy,—but rather one that would delight, the faithful employees of the Speer Plant have worked unceasingly to show "class" in the goods they are turning out.

THEIR efforts were not in vain—the advancement is most pleasing—operators attest the improvement and delight in the results obtained.

FURTHER explanation is not necessary. Each carbon is our reputation in itself. Ask the operator who uses them, or conduct experiments for yourself.

WE welcome just comparisons with other carbons, the results increase the orders received in our daily mail.

THE CAMERA

A Cinematographic Bibliography

SOME time ago (Camera Department, September 2, pages 1433-34) we had occasion to mention a few books of interest to students of motion picture photography, and express our opinion on the same. The correspondence of the Camera Department is still so overburdened, however, with requests for the names of suitable text books on Cinematography that we have prepared the following bibliography on the subject, and while it does not embrace everything which has been published pertaining to the subject, we offer it with the hope that all readers will find something of interest therein.

1—"La Chronophotographie," by Louis Gastine. Publishers, Gauthier Villars et Fils, 55 Quai des Grands-Augustins, Paris, 1899. Price $1.00.

A book of early cinematographic history, containing interesting illustrations of the early apparatus and results of Marey and others. Printed in French.

2—"La Photographie Animee," by Eugene Trutat. Publisher, Gauthier Villars, Paris, 1899. Price $1.50.

A splendid edition with fine illustrations showing the early cameras and projectors used by the various well known foreign firms. The subject of peristence of vision is explained in the thorough French style. Some present day inventors would open their eyes after reading this book, which shows that many "new and novel" mechanisms originated long ago. Printed in French.

4—"Animated Photography"—The A B C of the Cinematograph, by Cecil M. Hepworth. (Second edition revised by Hector Maclean).

Amateur Photographer's Library No. 14. Publishers, Hazell, Watson and Viney, Ltd., 1 Creed Lane, Ludgate Hill, London, E. C., 1900. Price 50 cents.

This little book is the work of one of England's pioneers in cinematography and contains excellent descriptions and diagrams of many well known types of intermittent movements. It is surprising how up-to-date appear the instructions in camera and laboratory work given by Mr. Hepworth in 1900.

5—"Le Cinematographe—Scientifique et Industriel," by Jacques Ducom. Publishers, "Cinema Revue," 118 Rue d'Assas, Paris, 1911. Price $2.00.

A pretentious volume, written in scholarly style and illustrating all the well known foreign cine cameras and laboratory devices. A feature is the inclusion of the complete text of Demeney's "Les Origines du Cinematographe" (an important chronology of early patents). In addition to the fine illustrations Ducom's work contains practical instructions and working formulæ, which combined with the historical chapters make it a most desirable reference work. Being published in French, many readers will, however, be debarred from exploring its contents.

6—"Conferences sur la Cinematographe," by E. Kress. Publishers, "Cinema Revue," Paris, 1912. Seven pamphlets. Price of set $1.00.

In this set of seven booklets the technique of motion picture production is studied from all angles. There is one booklet on raw film stock, and one on the early history of the art, while another treats of studio construction, lighting and proper costuming. Three numbers are devoted to a very good description of present-day French cinematograph cameras, while the remaining booklet explains how all of the wonderful dissolves, visions, and tricks of the French film makers are accomplished. These little essays by M. Kress are of fine literary quality in addition to their practical value to those who can negotiate the French text.

7—"La Technique Cinematographique," by Leopold Lobel. Publishers, H. Dunod and E. Pinat, 47 and 49 Quai des Grands-Augustins, Paris, 1912. Price $2.50.

Reviewed in Camera Department of September 2, 1916, page 1434, by reference to which it will be seen that this is an important work.

8—"The Handbook of Kinematography," by Colin N. Bennett. Publishers, The Kinematograph Weekly, Tottenham Street, London, W., 1913. (Second revised edition). Price $2.00.

Our comments on this work likewise appear in the Camera Department of September 2. The most practical work in the English language at present obtainable.

9—"Moving Pictures—How They Are Made and Worked," by Frederick A. Talbot. Publishers, J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia, 1912. Price $1.50.

See our criticism, Camera Department of September 2.

10—"Practical Cinematography and its Applications," by F. A. Talbot. Publishers, J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia, 1913. Price $1.00.

In this volume Talbot tries to guide the novice through the first steps of cinematography. Since Talbot is a better writer than film technician, we cannot say that he is eminently successful, but Mr. Talbot always sees to it that his books are plentifully provided with good and interesting illustrations. Some of the scientific phrases of cinematography are described, and the illustrations of the apparatus used in scientific cinematography, by the eminent French workers, are to be found in no other work. Hence this volume has some value as a book of reference.

11—"Motion Picture Making and Exhibiting," by John B. Rathbun. Publishers, C. C. Thompson Company, Chicago, 1914. Price $1.00.

This is not a book of working instructions and formulæ, but rather a description of the various processes involved in the taking, making and exhibiting of motion pictures. As such the ground is fairly well covered by the author who, it appears, is not a practical film maker. Good illustrations contribute largely to the interest of this little volume which we consider well worth the price asked.

12—"Picture Play Photography," by H. M. Lomas, F. R. P. S. Publishers, Ganes, Ltd. (The Bioscope) London, 1914. Price $1.50.

Lomas, while quite skilled in the science and practice of ordinary photography does not provide as valuable a treatise as might be expected. The studio arrangements and lights described are distinctly English while, as is well known, we lead our otherwise superior (photographically) British cousins in the art of cinematography. There are some good points brought out by Lomas, however, and while not very comprehensive the work will doubtless prove interesting to the amateur worker.

13—The "Agfa" Book of Motion Picture Formulæ, compiled by Geo. L. Barrows. Mailed gratis by the Berlin Aniline Works, 213-215 Water Street, New York City, on receipt of about 10 cents postage.

This is a neatly arranged booklet, fitting the pocket and containing a variety of developing formulæ suitable for any brand of film (negative or positive), valuable tinting and toning recipes, and many suggestions for eliminating laboratory difficulties and improving the quality of the output. This little book embodies the years of experience of its compiler in straightening out the troubles of many laboratories, and is of special value to the man who has to deal with the actual preparation of developing, fixing and coloring baths.

14—"Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen," by P. D. Hugon. Published by Pathe News, 1 Congress Street, Jersey City, N. J., 1915. Price 25 cents.

While published to sell at "a quarter a throw" many copies of this little booklet were circulated gratis by the Pathe News a year or so ago. This little pamphlet is full of valuable suggestions to those who would like to make and sell topical negatives. The edition was long ago exhausted, but if the demand was great enough Mr. Hugon (by whom the booklet is copyrighted) might be prevailed upon, at some future date, to issue another lot.

Readers of the Camera Department are advised to preserve this tabulated list of reference and instruction books on cinematography, as this list will not appear again, and moreover, all future inquiries regarding cinematographic instruction books will be referred to this issue of the Camera Department. With regard to future contributions to the literature on motion photography, new books on the subject will be promptly reviewed for Camera Department readers.

Hopwood's "Living Pictures" Reissued

THE starting point of motion pictures as a form of popular entertainment may be said to date from the introduction of the Lumiere "Cinematographe" in 1895. As is known to all expert motion picture mechanicians the Cinematographe was the first camera (and projector) which embodied simplicity of design and operation with the ability to produce tolerable screen results from films of the accepted Edison standard size.

From the year 1895 rapid strides were made in perfecting motion picture films and machinery and the multiplicity of patents issued within the next four years prompted Henry V. Hopwood, attached to the British Patent Office, to issue in 1899 a treatise on the principles of persistence of vision (the scientific basis of motion pictures) and the apparatus used in making and exhibiting cinematographic films.

Hopwood's book, "Living Pictures," is an exhaustive treatise on the methods and mechanisms of that period (1899) and has held its place through the ensuing years as the highest authority on motion picture mechanisms and patents chronology.

Although long out of print "Living Pictures" has recently been reissued in revised form by the Hatton Press, Ltd., of 123-25 Fleet Street, London, E. C. Revision is at the hands of R. B. Foster, B. Sc., who has put within the reach of all interested in cinematographic technique a valuable and interesting volume.

While the reviser and the publishers are to be congratulated upon the re-issuance of such an important work, we are forced to say that in re-editing "Living Pictures" some of its most important material has been removed, thereby decreasing its value for historical reference. We will mention but one instance to prove our contention. The description of Casler's "Mutograph" and "Biograph" which appeared in the original edition of "Living Pictures," (pages 135-139) has been eliminated—surely an important omission when it is recalled that following the "Cinematographe," Casler's "Biograph" was the next machine introduced which gave a really creditable performance.

To make up for these more or less unfortunate omissions Mr. Foster has added some new material of value, however. His chapter on intermittents gives the most complete data and diagrams covering Geneva type intermittents which we have seen to date, all figured out in an admirable scientific manner.

While the new edition of "Living Pictures" is not an instruction book on film making, it could be read with profit by all makers of cameras and projectors, and should be in the hands of all workers on motion picture mechanisms.

The price is six shillings, or we might say, one dollar and a half.

Operators Choose Officers for Year

Setting Intermittent Movement

O. P. McNutt, Havana, Ill.: "I wrote you once before for advice and you were so kind as to help me, so I am going to trouble you once more. There are only two theatres here and are both owned by three men. These men recently bought out Mr. Diamond, the former proprietor of the theatre where I work. They do their own work at the other theatre, but here I have to depend upon myself as I also do should anything go wrong at the other theatre. It has been my misfortune to be called upon to take down and re-assemble three Power 6-A machines. The other night while running, the intermittent movement locked and refused to revolve, and knowing positively that it was not dry I took it apart and when I put it back I had the same trouble that I have had with the others; it runs fine, gives a perfectly steady picture, but there is a click in the oil casing. It has taken me a long time to come to the point but what I want to know is this: Is there any special way to put the cam and geneva back in place? If there is I evidently have not done it right. I am a subscriber and reader of the NEWS, and the first place I look when I get my copy is the Projection Department. Thanking you in advance, I am yours very truly (when in trouble).

Answer: The only "special way" to put the cam and geneva of your machine back in place is to send the machine to the factory and have it done there. The adjustment necessary is of such a delicate nature that it is impossible for one without the proper instruments to make this adjustment right. An article will appear in these columns very shortly explaining the intermittent movement and showing just why it is not possible for the operator to make any "readjustment" after the machine has been sent out from the factory. This will also explain the reason for the "click," which unless it causes the machine to run hard will not work any great harm.

A New Motor Grease

LEONARD A. RUESS, for the past five years chief electrician of the Nicholas Power Company, is sponsor for a specially prepared grease to be used on the motors of projection machines, and electric fans.

This grease which is known as "Leonard's Motor Grease" is especially adapted for motion picture machine motors, and is only offered to the trade after exhaustive tests have proved its worth and perfectness.

The idea which led to the manufacture of this motor grease was gained by Mr. Ruess, through the condition of motors which were sent in to the Nicholas Power Company for repairs. Many of these motors came in with oil flowing through the motor frame and saturating the windings to such an extent as to set up numerous troubles such as: grounds, short circuits, and undue wear on the bearings and shafts, and injuring the winding of the motor, and causing the armature to burn out.

While this new grease may be a trifle more expensive (20 cents a can) it will prove to be more economical in the long run, as it will save wear on bearings and shafts, and being a non-fluid oil will not flow over the motor as other greases do.

It has been observed by Mr. Ruess that the use of light oil or vaseline on small motors is sure to cause trouble at the bearings, and he gives the following hints that should be borne in mind by the operator who wishes to avoid this kind of trouble: Always see that the wick in the oil cup has a proper bearing on the shaft. When the wick gets hard, a small piece about 1-16 of an inch should be cut off the end, giving a fresh surface. DO NOT LET THE OIL CUPS RUN DRY, and finally use Leonard's Specially Prepared Motor Grease.

Sales Manager Rudolph Wetter, who is identified with Mr. Ruess in marketing this new product, reports that they are filling orders as fast as they are received and have sent out over two hundred trial cans of this grease in the last ten days. Offices have been established at 150 Nassau street, New York City, Room 1426.

New automatic dissolve is independent of camera mechanism. Produces true clean fade-in and fade-out.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Origin of Popular Alcoholic Chant

WHENCE originated the melody is doubtful, but it has the characteristics of seventeenth century popular music of France. The tune drifted into the camp of the celebrated Marechal de Villars, who lay before Quesnoy on September 10, 1709, the night after the battle of Malplaquet. The good Queen Anne was at this time busy continuing the policy of her predecessor, namely, to fight France on every possible occasion. Therefore, the Duke of Marlborough, followed by a mighty host of sturdy Britons, lay over against Villars, who had been wounded in the knee.

It was his momentary indisposition that enabled the mighty Prince Eugene of Savoy, who had been hidden with his men in a deep wood to rush out and complete the discomfiture of Villars. Nevertheless, it was ascertained that the French losses were much smaller than those of the English and their allies. Thereupon the eminent Villars despatched to his monarch a report in which he declared that if heaven would only vouchsafe to the enemy a few more such victories the war would be brought to a speedy conclusion.

It would perhaps be assuming too much to suppose that the soldiery of Villars knew such important facts and were thereby inspired to address jeering lyrics to Marlborough. It is intimated, too, that the tune to which they sang was originally a lament on the death of the Duke of Guise in 1566, which will astonish no one familiar with the accommodating nature of popular melodies both in the early eighteenth and the early twentieth centuries. At any rate, the tune suddenly piped up in the French camp on the night after the battle of Malplaquet, and thus ran the text of it:

Malbrook s'en va-t-en guerre,
Mironton, mironton, mirontaine:
Malbrook s'en va-t-en guerre
Ne said quand reviendra.

Which is, being interpreted, "Malbrook has gone to war, mironton, and he doesn't know when he'll get back." The tune was almost note for note the same as it now is. The slight differences only serve to accentuate its Gallic character. "Malbrook," of course, was the best the Frenchman could do with "Malborough."

Just what become of this delectable lyric in the next sixty or seventy years the antiquarians do not seem to know. However, it emerged as a cradle song for the infant Dauphin, sung by Mme. Poitrine in 1781. A stormy petrel of a song, this, for here we are again on the eve of disturbances in France. Marie Antoinette herself sang it in her merry wanderings through the leafy avenues about the Trianon. The song of a queen is sure to become popular and soon the old tune was heard in all the nooks and corners of Versailles, next in Paris, and finally in all France. Beaumarchais injected it into his comedy, "The Marriage of Figaro," whence Mozart, when he came to make an opera of the work, incontinently kicked it out again.

It became a common tune for couplets in the French Vaudeville theatres, and even the august Beethoven took notice of it and gave it a momentary hum in his "Battle Symphony," where it figures as the theme of the French army. At length the song reached the zenith of its glory in France in 1867. Then it was made the subject of an opera bouffe, of which the text was written by Siraudin and Busnach, and the musical melange by Bizet, Délibes and some less important composers.

On September 13, 1782, the combined Spanish and French forces were defeated and Gibraltar and the English revenged themselves by adopting the old song as part of their rejoicings over their victory. In 1790 one Preston published this English version in a collection called "The Beauties of Music and Poetry." It began thus:

D'Artois returns from Spain
Oh, what a rare campaign!

The song domesticated itself on the British hearth as a piece for flute or violin. It was not till 1830 that the ribald convivial words "We Won't Go Home Till Morning" were first heard. It is interesting to know that the second stanza of this cheering song begins with the assertion, "For he's a jolly good fellow." It is this fact which causes bands always to burst into the inspiring strains of this melody when the toastmaster proposes the chief toast of the evening at the annual dinner of the Essenverin or the complimentary banquet to Gustavus von Puffendorf, inventor of the wireless tenor. It is interesting to note that on all such occasions newspaper reporters, with that craft which characterizes their methods, always ignore the sentiment contained in the second stanza, and solemnly record that when the chairman proposed the health of the guest of the evening and that worthy stood up to respond, the band played "We won't go home till morning."

Manageress Plans Special Kid Shows

BELLEFONTAINE, Ohio, promises to have a very prosperous motion picture season, as two new picture playhouses have been opened in one week—the Rialto, formerly the Cozy, and the Strand. The Rialto has a woman manager, Miss Leda McDonald, in charge. She will have the entire management of the house, including film bookings. The new interests back of the house include M. E. LeSourd, W. L. G. Rood and B. F. Peters.

The interior of the house has been rearranged, the screen being moved from the front to the back of the theatre. The pictures will be shown on a Gold Fiber screen, and new Simplex motor-driven machines have been installed. Films released by the General Film Company have been booked. Pathe Current Events and style pictures will be shown weekly. Matinees will be held every day with five cent admissions for children, the shows starting immediately after the schools close.

The Strand theatre opened its doors about the same time as the Rialto. This is the house built by Daniel Gutilla.

Popular Screen in Prison and Barracks

THE Minusa Cines Products Company, manufacturers of a gold fibre screen, report several recent sales. The Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta, has placed an order with the manufacturers for a specially constructed screen to be installed in the U. S. Penitentiary at Atlanta. The Government has also purchased a number of these screens for its various army posts along the border and in the West which will be installed in ample time to be ready for Christmas holiday use.

The Deseret Film Company, Salt Lake City, Utah, under the management of D. L. Levitt has installed a screen of Minusa make in its projection parlor. Exhibitors who have bought this screen to use in new houses are the Kehrlein brothers of Fresno, Cal., who are to open the Oakland Photo theatre, and Samuel Rucker of Chicago, who is to open the new Century theatre, Kansas City, Mo.

Baltimore Operators Elect Officers

AT the annual election of officers held on Sunday, December 3, 1916, the following officers were elected to serve Local 181, I. A. T. S. E. of Baltimore, Maryland.

G. Kingston Howard, President and Business Manager; First Vice-President, William George; Second Vice-President, Norbert Haefele; Third Vice-President, Nelson Baldwin; Financial Secretary and Treasurer, Carrol G. Bayne; Recording Secretary, Otto J. Niquet; Business Agent, William F. Evans; Sergeant-at-Arms, Harry T. Hess; Delegate to I. A. Convention, G. Kingston Howard; Trustees, Joseph Quade; F. Clarence Grote; and Harry Wallis. Delegates to the Baltimore Federation of Labor, Sam Isaacson, N. Basil Morgan, and Frank T. Holmes. Delegate to the Maryland-District of Columbia Federation of Labor, Sam Isaacson.

The offices of Local 181 are in the Gayety Theatre Building, and in charge of G. Kingston Howard, who can be found there between the hours of 1 to 3 p.m. and 5 to 7 p.m., other times at his residence, 1430 Federal street, Baltimore, Md.

It speaks well for ability of these officers, and shows that the membership of the local appreciate the efforts of their officers when they are returned to office to carry on the work which they have been actively engaged in during the preceding year. Brother Howard is a man who not only has business ability but is an able executive as well, and I feel sure that "181" has made no mistake in re-electing so able a man to serve them. To the newly elected officers I extend my sincere congratulations and hope that the New Year may bring you added laurels, and your local even greater prosperity than it has enjoyed in the past, and if my humble services can be of any benefit to you or your local, I am yours to command.

Stanley Opens for Nick Hayes

AFTER weeks spent in rebuilding, redecorating and rebeautifying the house, the Great Northern at Broad and Erie avenue, Philadelphia, was reopened on Thursday last. "Everything new except the name" has been adopted as the justifiable slogan of the house which is under the direction of the Stanley Company, with Harry Ertle as manager.

The exterior presents an attractive picture; all steps leading to the interior have been removed. An imposing entrance of marble flag leads to the box offices both on Broad street and Germantown avenue and from this to the auditorium proper. This has been so transformed that it is unrecognizable. One even but sloping floor has replaced the former one and every seat in the house (and there are exactly 1,000) can be reached without walking down a step. Every column has been removed and the screen can be seen unobstructedly from every section of the house. The seating capacity, which has been doubled, is all on one floor. Upholstered chairs of the latest design add to the comfort of patrons. The flooring is cemented tile and handsomely carpeted. Rest rooms for women and men and one for ushers have been opened and fitted up with all the necessary appliances. The stage has been rebuilt and the latest model screen has been installed.

Replaced After Five Years' Success

THE new motion picture theatre of the Brown Amusement Company, at 1918 Cumberland avenue, Middlesboro, Ky., is nearing completion and it is expected will be ready for opening soon.

The new theatre will be known as The Brownie, is modern in every respect and all the fittings and appointments are of the very latest designs. The Amuzu theatre, next door to the new house, which has been operated by the Brown Amusement Company for the past five years, is being torn down. C. M. LYNCH.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

Downtown Theatre Novel in Many Ways

AT thirty-one and thirty-two Park Row, one of New York's most unique theatres is located. The management, because of the character of the programs and the distinctively high class patronage catered to, likens it to a miniature Strand, and this aptly describes it. Covering the site on which is claimed to have stood over a century ago the first theatre of New York, is now a modern fireproof building seating five hundred and twenty persons. The old theatre seated twenty-seven hundred persons, but how different in interior and in construction!

The City Hall theatre of to-day is built entirely of steel and brick. An ornamental iron marquise, decorated with many lights, topped by an unusually large vertical electric sign. Attractiveness of front is essential here, for the business is largely transient. Attention is immediately caught by the neat display of photographs of scenes and stars from plays, all neatly framed, and as close to the street as possible without closing the spacious way to the inside. Passing the glass doors and on into the lobby we find no pains spared to have it as beautiful and elaborate as good taste will permit. Fourteen by fourteen feet in size, we find ourselves surrounded by marble wainscoting, topped by mirrored walls, finished above with large hand-painted historical pictures in heavy gold frames. Plaster decoration and a gold border design meet the eye as it looks up at the ceiling from which is suspended a large hanging lamp. The box office is equipped with an "Automatic" ticket seller, quick service being a very great essential here.

Passing on over marble tiled floor, of neat design, and through the inside bank of solid copper doors topped by an ornate glass transom, useful for ventilation as well as ornament, a vista of unusual interior is offered. "Old New York" has been suggested to us as we entered, even to the decorations on the ceiling, but here we find in large panels handpainted pictures, nine by twelve feet in size, of little old New York when it was typically Dutch. These between columns with gold capitals merging into an unusually handsome ceiling design in large paneled effect, are set of by gold frames, and give an air of homeyness and attractive luxury combined, which must be seen and actually felt to be appreciated. Keenstone finish on the interior walls has proved both serviceable and beautiful.

Chandeliers wired for both direct and indirect illumination are lighted between performances so that the spectators may appreciate the elaborate provision made for their comfort and charm. Old ivory and gold gives a most cheerful decorative scheme.

The screen used is the "atmospheric," which displays very clear projection, set off by black border twelve by sixteen feet in size. Going into details of equipment, service features for the public, and the men responsible for the successful management, we will note the following:

The projection booth measures twelve by twelve by seven feet high. Two Power's 6B machines and a "dimmer" are included in its equipment. On either side of the projection booth gold pipes are seen, a part of the Kimball Orchestral Organ installed at a cost of about eight thousand dollars. To the right of the screen toilets are located. A "pay station" telephone booth is at the right for patrons. The heating system of this theatre was installed by the Ideal Heating Company of Brooklyn. By means of this system the temperature of the "City Hall" is kept uniform. The air is also kept hygienic by this same system. A Typhoon fan equipment furnishes ample ventilation. To the right upon entering a cancealed cast iron stairway leads to the projection room and an unusually large office for a "movie" theatre (fourteen by twenty-two feet). This theatre opens at nine thirty A.M. and closes around eleven. First run Triangle, Metro, V.L.S.E., Kleine, Fox, and Pathe Pictures are shown. Mr. Weinstock, the manager, gives as much attention to the "short reels" as he does to his features. They also must be "first run" pictures. The General, Mutual, and Universal film services supply the latter films. The five hundred and twenty seats are all of genuine oak, stained green, leather upholstered, and equipped with a self-raising device. The "City Hall" was opened September 30, 1916, designed by Louis Sheinart and built by M. Shapiro and Sons, both of New York. The Rambush Company did all the interior decorating for the Reliable Company of New York, who are the owners. The officers of this company are Joseph Weinstock, president; H. A. Freedman, secretary and treasurer; David Weinstock, managing director. Their investment was one hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Weinstock always thought the people in the financial section of New York wanted a theatre on the order of the higher-priced, up-town shows, and has proved to the satisfaction of his stockholders and the public generally that he had the right idea. The admission price of fifteen cents is cheerfully paid and certainly value received is given in the show itself.

Market House Becomes Modern Theatre

Special to Motion Picture News.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Dec. 5.

THE Strand, the new motion picture theatre at Knoxville, Pa., which was formally opened last week, was erected at a cost of $20,000.

This theatre is owned by J. A. and A. A. Weiland, the Fourth avenue film men, and is the old Knoxville market house remodeled. The interior is built in bleacher style and the latest improvements in motion picture appliances have been installed.

Every Day You Face The Problem of advertising your show aggressively yet with dignity. You have tried posters, lobby frames, specially painted banners, and everything else you could think of. These various devices cost you a lot of money, but seemed to lack "punch." You have found electric bulb signs a great expense and not wholly effective.

You can now get the most effective theatre advertising ever devised for less money than you have been paying. Rawson & Evans Co., the world's largest manufacturers of glass signs, have designed some signs for you. These signs consist of glass letters set in a durable frame. Electric bulbs inside the frame make every letter brilliantly legible. The lettering can be changed in a jiffy to make any reading matter desired.

The innumerable advantages of these signs cannot be listed here. Our illustrated booklet tells the whole story. Just write your name and address on the margin of this page, mail it to us, and you'll get full details by return mail. Will you do it now?

Omaha Theatre Outclasses All Others

THE Sun theatre, 1410-12-14 Farnam street, Omaha, Neb., recently opened, was constructed at a cost of $150,000 in the best motion picture theatre block in the city. It is an ornamental building, designed only after an architect had traveled to a number of cities, looking at different theatres. On the outside it is cream colored terra cotta, with a beautiful canopy, myriads of lights and frescoed designs that are highly ornamental.

On either side of the main lobby are little stores. The ticket booth stands alone, adjacent to the sidewalk, and is itself a perfect little gem of architecture. It has more modern fittings, including ticket clip, money changer and other devices, than any ticket booth in this part of the country.

The foyer is exceptionally large and is finished in old rose, dull gold and light blue. The main entrance through the foyer has in the center a lounging room, with a fireplace, easy chairs, table and reading matter and telephones. To one side is a smoking room for men, and to the other side a rest room for women patrons.

The theatre chairs are mahogany, with upholstered work in green leather air cushions. There are two sets of loges, set off by large brass rails and furnished with rattan chairs. Draped from the rails are rose velvet curtains to match the carpeting on the floor. Red velvet curtains draped about the screen give it a pleasing effect. The indirect system of lighting, leaving plenty of light even while the pictures are being shown, and a highly modern system of ventilation is used, with the radiators out of sight.

Sun, Omaha's Thanksgiving Contribution, Claimed to Surpass Any Yet Built in This Vicinity

The projection room is one of the best equipped in the west. The organ is the largest and best in this part of the country.

The World Realty Company, builders. Sam and Harry Goldberg, who made a success of the Princess theatre in Omaha; Harry Rachmand, proprietor of the Grand; W. R. McFarland and W. H. Jones make up the company. First run World, Metro and Fox releases will be shown.

This theatre may not equal some of those in the east or on the coast, but it is the best in Nebraska and as good as any in Iowa.

It was equipped, throughout projection room, ticket booth and main auditorium, by the Western Supply Company, organized in Omaha several months ago by F. A. Van Husan. This is the largest contract yet handled by this company.

Bethlehem Owners Take Another

PLANS have been drawn for a new $100,000 theatre in Bethlehem, Pa. This will be a combination of the legitimate and photo dramas, and will be one of the finest in the state of Pennsylvania.

The house will be under the control of L. W. and H. Heiberger, who already have the Lehigh Orpheum theatre of South Bethlehem, Pa. IRENE PAGE SOLOMON.

Directory of New Theatres

ALABAMA

W. T. COX of Gadsden, Ala., bought the Alamo theatre some months ago, and by showing only the best pictures obtainable has built up a lucrative business and is playing to packed houses.

ILLINOIS

An enterprise which will make Chicago a theatrical centre of the first magnitude has been launched by Marshall Field and Company, the famous Chicago merchants, and A. H. Woods, the theatrical manager. After a series of conferences Marshall Field and Company has decided to purchase at a cost of $2,000,000, a property of 100 x 180 feet at Randolph and Dearborn streets, in the very heart of the loop district. On this site Mr. Woods will build a theatre and office building ten stories in height at a cost of $700,000. The terms of the arrangement call for a ninety-nine-year lease.

George M. Anderson (Broncho Billy), who has been associated with H. H. Frazee at the Long Acre theatre, is to have a new playhouse all his own in Chicago. Mr. Anderson closed a deal recently by which a theatre is to be built for him in the Loop district. It is expected that it will be ready for opening early in the spring. As the Marshall Field Company is to build a theatre in Chicago for A. H. Woods, there will be keen competition among the first-class houses in the Windy City next year.

IOWA

The American theatre at Corydon, formerly owned by Wilson and Anspach, is now under the management of F. L. Hayes.

The Ozone theatre in Highland Park, Des Moines, has been sold to Mrs. Nina Pickett and John Arnold of Ames. The new proprietors have closed the house and are remodeling and repairing it. J. C. Collins, former proprietor, has left Des Moines for Indianapolis, where he will probably take charge of a picture house.

J. W. Marriott, former owner of the Pleasant Hour theatre at Minburn, has sold his house to C. B. Basart, who has taken immediate charge.

Buresh Brothers of Oxford Junction, who now operate the Bohemian Hall at that place, are contemplating opening their new Opera House about January 1.

Henry Rohling has purchased the Opera House at Lost Nation from Paul Skelley, former proprietor.

J. T. Soenksen, former proprietor of the moving picture theatre at Bennett, has sold out to L. Lamp.

After a series of remodeling and repairing the formal opening of the New Star theatre at Mason City was held recently. Carnations were distributed at every performance during the day and the occasion was a gala one for Mason City.

Smith and Son, who now operate the Opera House at Garden Grove, have taken over the Opera House at Van Wert and are showing moving pictures.

The moving picture theatre at Blairstown, which recently went bankrupt, was sold under the sheriff's hammer, going to W. H. Woods, who will shortly reopen it. It was formerly run by the Blairstown Amusement Company.

The moving picture theatre at Carney, managed by Mrs. R. McCarty, has been closed temporarily.

After a varied career the Alamo theatre at Sixth and College streets, in Des Moines, has again been closed on account of poor business. F. LeRoy was the last manager.

No shows will be given at the Little Gem in Duncombe this winter, according to Gleason and Co., who operate this house. No reason is given.

Walter Turley is endeavoring to have a hall at Bradgate remodeled. If he is successful he will open it as a picture theatre.

A new motion picture theatre is in store for Leon. Mr. Campen, who just arrived there from Seattle, is contemplating opening a house. Mr. Campen is making arrangements for installing new motio generators and 300 new seats.

Inability to get a suitable building in which to open for the winter has forced Earl Riley to abandon the picture business at Decatur. During the summer months Mr. Riley had the Outdoor theater.

Manager Willis will open the Rex, a remodeled theatre at Fairbury, January 1. The house will seat 350. He has purchased two new motiographs and complete outfit.

One of the best houses opened in Iowa this fall was that of Julius & Awe, the Strand, at Fort Dodge. It is large, beautifully constructed and decorated, and equipped up to the minute. It was opened last week.

KANSAS

G. W. Bays of Dodge City has purchased the Star theatre of Newton, and has already started the remodeling of his new house. Mr. Bays was formerly in the business at Dodge City.

KENTUCKY

Frank Ogden, who operates the Cozy theatre, Winchester, has closed a deal with A. B. Arnett of Midway to take over his lease on the Colonial theatre in that town. The Colonial has been closed since last spring. Mr. Ogden will operate it as a picture house.

MISSOURI

Masterpiece Film Corporation—Joseph E. Sippy, James L. Shannon, H. P. Wolfberg, W. J. Kiely, M. F. Heib and Parkhurst, Flat River, Mo., 100 shares each; to do a general film, theatrical and picture show business. Capital stock (fully subscribed and 50 per cent paid up), $60,000.

NEW JERSEY

Louis Schlesinger, Inc., leased for Mrs. Ida Duesel, the moving picture theatre at 650 Bergen street, near Clinton avenue, formerly known as the Star theatre, to Anthony Cece.

Frank C. Hall, a well known movies exhibitor, in association with Arthur M. Werner and Harry T. Hall, have purchased the controlling interest in the Strand theatre, Newark. The new owners will take possession immediately, and on December 11 will change the policy of the house from one of pictures exclusively to a combination of photoplays and vaudeville.

NEW YORK

The old church property at the southwest corner of Broad and Lombard streets, New York City, has been sold for Frederick H. Keiser, of Pottstown, who bought it about two years ago, to the Quality Amusement Company, of New York City, for $100,000. The sale was negotiated by E. C. Brown, real estate broker, 427 South Broad street, representing the buyer, and R. T. Shaw, representing the owner. The buyer intends to improve the property by the construction of a modern theatre, to cost between $60,000 and $75,000, which will be devoted largely to the development of dramatic art among the colored people. The promoters are already operating three theatres, the Lafayette, in New York City; the Howard, in Washington, and the Colonial, in Baltimore. Such Broadway successes as "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," "Madame X" and "To-day" are given in these houses, and are said to suffer nothing in comparison with their production by white companies.

Bastine & Co. have leased the building 304 West Thirty-seventh street, New York City, to the Favorite Amusement Company, a moving picture concern, which will make extensive alterations to the property and connect it with the adjoining theatre on Eighth avenue.

Shampan & Shampan, architects, filed plans for a moving picture theatre, 65 x 100, in the south side of De Kalb avenue, 60 feet west of Sumner avenue, Brooklyn, for the M. Z. Realty Company, owners.

The Crescent, Ithaca's new $100,000 motion picture playhouse, was formally opened last week, when several thousand persons attended the initial performance and many more were turned away. The new theatre, located at 217 North Aurora street, is one of the finest of its size, showing pictures exclusively, in the State. The two floors have a seating capacity of 1,300, the main floor accommodating more than 1,000. This is the largest single floor seating capacity in Ithaca with the exception of Bailey Hall at Cornell University.

Plans for the ballroom and moving picture theatre which the Musicians' Mutual Protective Union of New York City, will add to its headquarters, were filed recently with the Building Department by Trowbridge & Livingston, who estimate the cost of the improvement at $200,000. The addition will cover the property at 209 to 215 East Eighty-fifth street, which is in the rear of the Yorkville Casino, the property and headquarters of the musicians' union.

Announcement has been made that a group of theatrical men propose erecting a theatre on Ninth street, near Fifth avenue, New York City. Two sites are now under consideration and the decision will be reached, it is said, within ten days.

NEBRASKA

More new houses in Nebraska and Iowa!

The New Brach, just opened at Hastings, Manager Beghtol in charge, is showing to capacity. A fine organ, live advertising, exclusive features and a comfortable, nice looking house help draw the crowds, he says.

The Best, Wilbur, was opened on Thanksgiving Day. It will show features every night, admission 10 and 15 cents. It showed World features at the opening. The seating capacity is 300, and it is a splendid looking theatre.

H. F. Kennedy has opened the Lyric at Broken Bow. He is enjoying splendid business, he reports, showing World and Vitagraph pictures.

Martha Ellison is the owner of the New Home at Central City, and P. G. Smith is the manager. The house is brand new and has just opened, showing "The Birth of a Nation" to an attendance that jammed it to the doors. Central City now has three houses, all new and up-to-the-minute. And Central City is a town of only 2,200 people. Are there too many houses for a town of that size? Smith doesn't think so.

A new motion picture theatre is just being started in Wahoo.

William Swan has just started the New Swan theatre at Columbus, Neb. It seats 587 people and Mr. Swan is justly proud of his holding.

When G. G. Hunter remodeled his theatre at Valentine, he put in 500 new upholstered chairs and the finest equipment he could get.

A. B. Young has bought a theatre from Nick Longworth at Schuyler and installed a new simplex, besides making other improvements.

Manager Thomas of the Strand in Omaha was the first exhibitor to buy one of the new automatic arc controls. He bought two and his operators declare they are happier than ever.

L. C. Lovell is just starting to build a new theatre at Maywood.

When J. R. Robinson bought out R. M. Kirchner at Clay Center, he immediately started remodeling the theatre and when it opened last week it had new machines, new chairs, new everything!

Jack Harper, owner of the Lyric, Aurora, has put in new chairs and a new machine.

P. H. Hoppen opened the New Crescent, a brand new house at Kearney, on December 1. The theatre seats 800 people and was built at a cost of $75,000. It is an elegant building, and in the best theatre locality in Kearney, a busy little city as wideawake and as prosperous as any in the world.

Mrs. Frank Drassal has sold her theatre at Verdigree to John Bauman.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Liberty theatre, on Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, opposite Shady avenue, East End, has been leased to the Rowland & Clark theatres, who own and operate the Regent theatre in East Liberty. The lease is for a long term of years at a total rental approximating $500,000 for the period. The transaction is the largest in motion picture theatre property ever negotiated in Pittsburg.

TENNESSEE

Wartrace's new picture house, which is owned and operated by Cherry Bros., opened its door this week, and gave the election returns to more than 150 citizens, a direct wire being obtained from the Western Union. The picture house will continue to operate, and open every Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

VIRGINIA

The Circuit Theatres Corporation of Richmond, which is incorporated under the laws of Virginia, was granted authority to do business in New York State recently by Secretary of State Hugo. The company is capitalized at $250,000.

WISCONSIN

There is a rumor to the effect that Eau Claire is to have a new moving picture theatre. It was stated a few days ago that an outside party was here looking over the city with that aim in view and was negotiating for the lease of a building. It was impossible to learn the name of the party or any particulars other than it was likely that the theatre would be opened on the North Side.

CANADA

A moving picture theatre and vaudeville house will be erected for George Reinhart, proprietor of the Commercial Hotel on the site of the hotel stables on Macdonnell street. Tenders for the masonry and carpentry work have already been given out, the former to G. A. Scroggie, and the latter to J. J. Checkley. It is the intention of the owner to build a theatre that will be used both as a picture house and with a stage large enough to accommodate any of the traveling organizations of the vaudeville or dramatic nature.

Many Improvements Charm Kentuckians

PLANS are being made for remodeling the Strand theatre. New seats will be installed and the first floor will have a seating capacity of about 900. The new chairs will be upholstered in leather and will be placed thirty-eight inches apart, while the present seats have only thirty inches clearance. New carpets will be laid throughout the building. The box office, now on the inside, will be moved on a line with the sidewalk. Two new projecting machines, Powers 6-B, as well as a new screen, will be installed. Improved heating facilities will be arranged and the entire building made as comfortable as possible. The present pipe organ will be used fifteen minutes in each hour and the balance of the time an orchestra will furnish music.

J. B. Elliott, president of the Colonial Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., has been made general manager of the Strand pending the final transfer of the stock of Michael Switow, president and general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, to the Colonial Amusement Company, negotiations for which have been in progress for some time. Slaughter Sparks, the present manager, will remain in active charge of the theatre.

The Strand theatre is one of the finest picture houses in Kentucky and represents an investment of approximately $150,000. The capital stock, which is held mostly by a number of Lexington people, amounts to $54,000. Although the Colonial Amusement Company has bought an interest in the Strand, the Phoenix Amusement Company still holds a majority of the stock, and it is announced that both companies are separate organizations and will retain their individuality. LYNCH.

Another Strand Opens

THE new Strand theatre, with a seating capacity of 600, opened in Fort Dodge, Iowa, November 28, with Metro's "Romeo and Juliet." Music for this new theatre is furnished by a Bartola Special Grand.

Auto Arc Price Is Advanced

THE American Auto Arc Company of Chicago, Illinois, has announced that owing to the advanced price of materials it has been found necessary to increase the price of the Auto Arc on January 1, 1917, to $67.50 f. o. b. Owensboro, Kentucky, where the factory is located.

Music

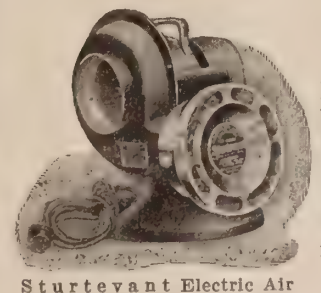
are constantly drawing upon their emotions and should have frequent intermissions for rest. No one but a professional musician knows the physical condition a player or singer is in after a day's work. The muscles may not be very tired, but the nerves are. If you have the continuous show "bug," arrange to give your musicians plenty of rest or you will soon wonder why your music sounds so lifeless and monotonous. You can run projecting machines at full speed all day long, but you cannot do that with musicians. They will either go to pieces soon and lose all ambition, or they will quit. Give them good instruments to play, kept in good condition; make it financially worth their while to give you the best that's in them; when they play a picture especially well, don't be afraid to offer a compliment or so (the best machinery in the world needs oil now and then), and they will give you an opportunity to brag about your music.

Sincerely,

PIANIST.



ONLY by the interchange of ideas such as those expressed by our friend, whose letter is reproduced, can we make headway and educate ourselves. This letter should be given careful consideration, for it reiterates one of the cardinal features in successful picture theatre operation—namely, the absolute necessity of the best picture music which can possibly be produced.

LET us have more letters of this kind. The NEWS is anxious for statements from our subscribers on this or any other subject which will tend to improve the business. Don't put it off, write now—let the entire industry have the benefit of your knowledge and experience—"Keep the Ball Rolling." E. K. GILLETT.

The ventilation of your theatre is almost as closely connected with your cash receipts as are the pictures you show. Good air means more people. A house that is known to have good air draws people who avoid movie shows because of bad ventilation.

"THE TRUANT SOUL"

WALTHALL'S GREATEST PLAY

SCREEN TIME 2 HOURS

A photoplay of intense passions—of hate, greed, shame, pride, revenge, sacrifice, love. It shows man sunken to the depths of vice and degradation, man raised to sublime heights. It grips the very soul and holds the spectator fascinated, breathless, from beginning to end.

Greatest Novel

PUBLISHED serially in Cosmopolitan Magazine, with its five million readers, and now enjoying immense popularity in book form, the coming of "The Girl Philippa" to the screen means months of crowded theatres before the demand already created can be accommodated.

ANITA STEWART

darling of the millions, first in the hearts of photoplay lovers everywhere, will linger in memories always as "Philippa"—her greatest achievement.

S. Rankin Drew

directed the production of "The Girl Philippa," and plays the lead with Miss Stewart. All the genius that he has evidenced, both as director and actor, in earlier Vitagraph productions, finds its full expression in this surpassing photodrama.

Of the latter, we hold most priceless, the friendships which are ours.

Of the former, we leave you to judge, stating simply that we have tried to make 1916 a Year of Fulfillment—so to build that we might better serve those who look to us for co-operation in the march onward.

For 1917, we want to do more than wish you a Prosperous New Year.

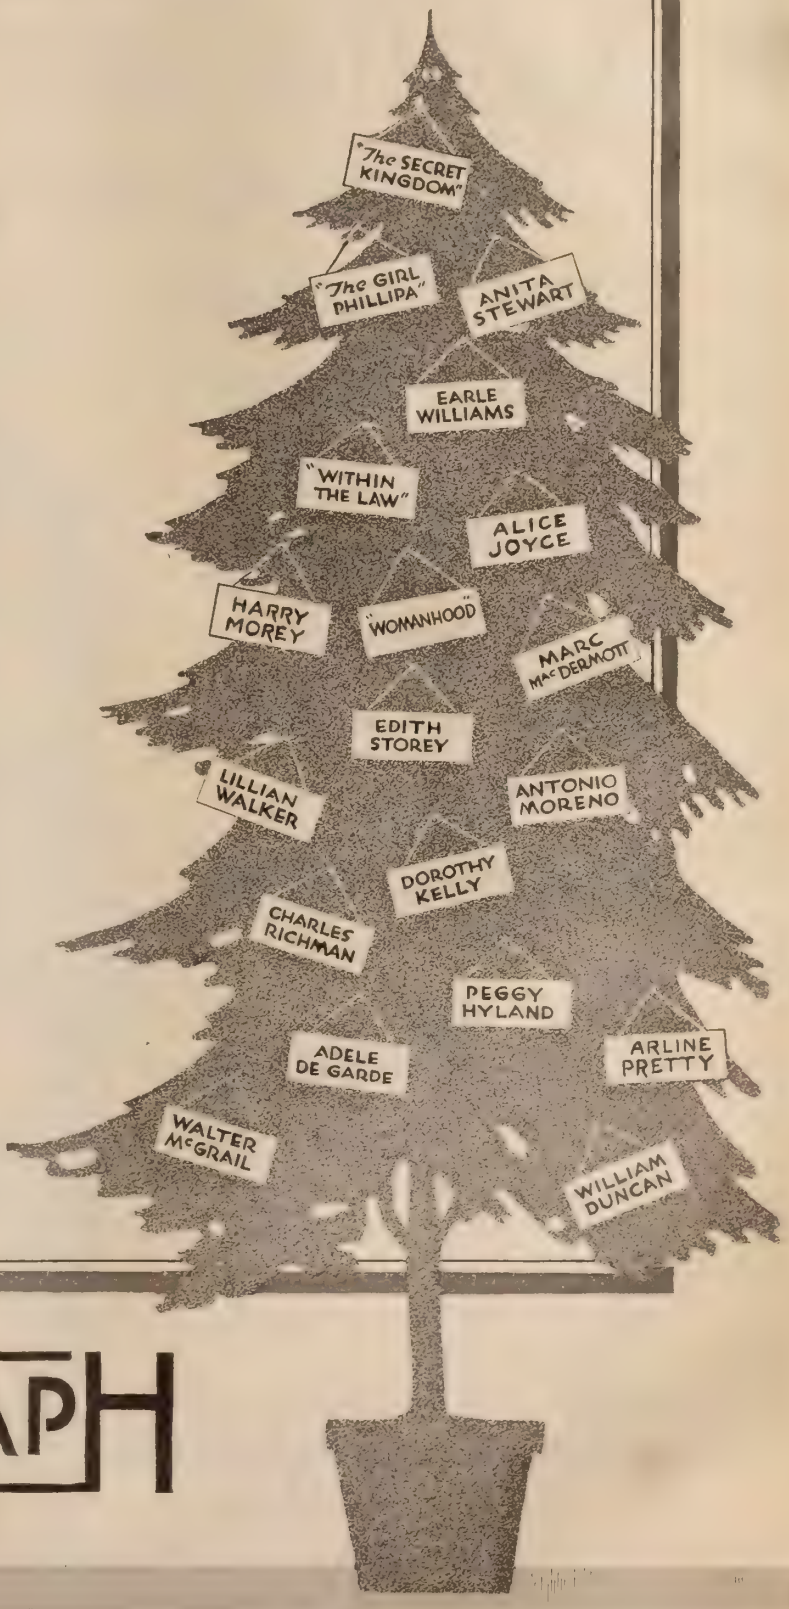
We want, so far as it lies within our power, to assure you a Prosperous New Year.

To this end we have decked our tree with the fullest fruits of honesty of purpose, wealth of resources and years of experience.



It is Vitagraph's gift to you—the gift over which we have labored faithfully and to which we have given our wholehearted endeavor for your success.

"I AM writing you regarding the remarkable success of Mr. Sothern's second Vitagraph feature, 'An Enemy to the King,' which we presented at our Zeigfeld Theatre, opening Saturday last. The public responded in great numbers.

"As you know, the clientele of this theatre is of the highest class in the country. Yet they were content to wait in line all day for the chance to enter. Their opinions of the picture were so complimentary, it is unfortunate that they could not have been recorded.

"I again offer Vitagraph my felicitations on the merit of these Sothern productions. You are entitled to warm commendation, for it is by such efforts on your part that photoplays are gradually being placed on levels still higher and higher.

"When the day of the perfect photoplay arrives, your company will be entitled to a lion's share of the credit of its perfection.

"I predict for this latest Sothern release even greater success than attended his first picture, 'The Chattel.' "

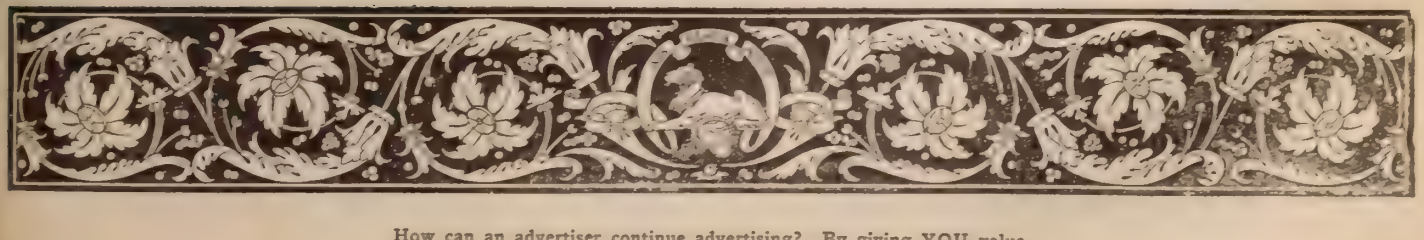
ALIGNED in this new motion picture company are personalities that have been responsible for the biggest developments of the modern stage and screen.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, the President, was a founder of one of the first two companies formed to produce feature films in which good taste and refinement were dominant. He has, from the beginning, been a factor in the production of better pictures and helped through shrewd and intelligent understanding to make motion pictures one of our greatest industries.

EDGAR SELWYN, the Vice-President, has, with ARCHIBALD SELWYN and CROSBY GAIGE, brought the theatrical producing firm of Selwyn & Co. to the forefront in dramatic production. Their plays, their clientele of authors, their alertness and their code of business honor have made for them a position that is the envy of many older firms and the model for most of the newer ones.

ARTHUR HOPKINS, Vice-President, is one of the producers who, because of his creative ability and capacity, has been invited into this alliance. His knowledge of stagecraft gives him high rank at the start in the field of motion picture production.



MARGARET MAYO is the author of several of the most profitable plays in the history of the American stage and is also one of the ablest judges of plays in the theatrical profession. Her judgment and discerning vision are counted as great assets by this company.

Our advice to ALL EXHIBITORS is to watch and read the future announcements of this company with great care.

DOROTHY KELLY

The Motion Picture News, Says :

"A money-getter for every kind of theatre has been devised by Vitagraph. Its title is 'The Secret Kingdom.' The suspense is continuous and the thrills have plenty of real punch without any gruesomeness that would offend the most critical audience. We believe Vitagraph has mixed all the requisite elements of a serial in such nicely proportioned quantities that 'The Secret Kingdom' will have a universal appeal to all classes of audience."

The Morning Telegraph, Says :

"If the evasion of the hackneyed and departure from the beaten trail blazed by precedent is worthy of laudatory comment, then there should be a general uplifting of thankful voices to the Vitagraph in appreciation of this latest contribution to the film world. It is a masterly production, directed capably, and boasts a cast which handles its difficult situations faultlessly. There is a splendid tale of romance and adventure interwoven by tense situation upon tense situation, and interest never lags throughout the action of the piece."

The Motion Picture Mail, Says :

"'The Secret Kingdom' should enjoy a wide popularity and prove a 'best-seller' with the exhibitor. It is replete with the most uncanny adventures and the episodes pass thrillingly in review with a wealth of photographic detail. The picture was thoroughly enjoyable. We predict a wide popularity."

The Exhibitors' Trade Review, Says:

"'The Secret Kingdom' will stand the strongest kind of boosting. You can go to it with every feeling of confidence. Judging by the excellent episodes already presented, there can be no doubt as to the ultimate success of this serial. The production is alive with good box-office possibilities and likely to be much in demand."

The New York Tribune, Says:

"* * * The episodes shown were vastly interesting and make one anxious for the speedy release of the remaining portions."

Of the Host of Exhibitors' Commendations Received, Maurice H. Chonski, of Chicago, Voices the Enthusiasm Common to All:

"I am under obligations to you for insisting that I see the opening chapters of 'The Secret Kingdom,' for, as I was prejudiced against serials, I would surely have deprived my patrons of a great treat, for I am convinced that a serial of the quality and interest of 'The Secret Kingdom,' will not only make business but will hold it. I, personally, am anxiously awaiting the opportunity to present this serial in my theatres, as I know my patrons are going to be as enthusiastic over it as I am."

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

DECEMBER 30, 1916

NEW MUTUAL SERIAL IS ABSOLUTELY NOVEL IN THEME AND PLOT

"THE Perils of Our Girl Reporters"—the sensational new Mutual serial, is absolutely novel in theme and plot. It is different in every respect from any other serial that exhibitors have had an opportunity to book. It pictures newspaper life—from the "inside." It depicts the trials and tribulations encountered by reporters in securing front page news. It shows theatre patrons an angle of every day life that will prove a revelation. It is the "something different" in motion pictures that the public is so eagerly searching for.

Daring Girl Reporters.

Everyone knows that there are women on the staffs of every large daily newspaper. Some of them are society editors. Some of them "cover" social functions and entertainments. Some of them are what is known as "sob sisters." In search of material for "sob stories" the girl reporters covering this class of work are compelled to venture into strange places—to probe the life of the underworld—to venture daringly where few women ever go. The experiences they encounter form the basis of this new motion picture serial—"The Perils of Our Girl Reporters." It is new. It is novel. It is thrilling.

Stories Based on Real Incidents.

All of the fifteen stories in "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" are based on real incidents in newspaper life. This amazing new serial was made by the Niagara Film Studios. It was directed by George Terwilliger. It features Earl Metcalfe, Helen Green and Zena Keefe. Each story is complete in itself. Each is two reels in length. The first chapter is released on December 28th. Bookings can be made now at any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges.

Latest Chaplin Release Is Pleasing Public

Charlie Chaplin's newest laugh-maker—"The Rink"—is a pronounced success. Charlie Chaplin's funny feet have made millions laugh. Charlie Chaplin's odd hat has caused countless chuckles. Charlie Chaplin's famous cane has proven a magic wand for inspiring mirth. But Charlie Chaplin's roller skates—they are really the feature of "The Rink"—are setting a hot pace for the feet, the hat and the cane already mentioned. Capacity houses are the rule at every theatre showing "The Rink." You can book it now at any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges.

HELEN HOLMES WINNING

By Her Daring Work in "A Lass of the Lumberlands"

A HOST OF NEW ADMIRERS

"Helen Holmes grows more popular each day," writes an exhibitor from Indiana. Many exhibitors thought it would be hard for Miss Holmes to find a stronger vehicle than "The Girl and the Game." Now they are discovering that "A Lass of the Lumberlands" is even stronger—even better—is winning the fair star a host of new admirers. In this newest of Mutual chapterplays—"A Lass of the Lumberlands"—Helen Holmes is performing feats of daring that surpass all her previous efforts. In single chapters of the new play there are more dramatic moments than the average serial has in its entire length. Wise exhibitors are capitalizing this interest of the public in Helen Holmes for themselves. By showing "A Lass of the Lumberlands" they are packing their houses nightly. You have the opportunity of doing the same for your theatre. Any of the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges in America will accept bookings on this record-breaking chapterplay.

"The Vampires" Series Exceedingly Popular

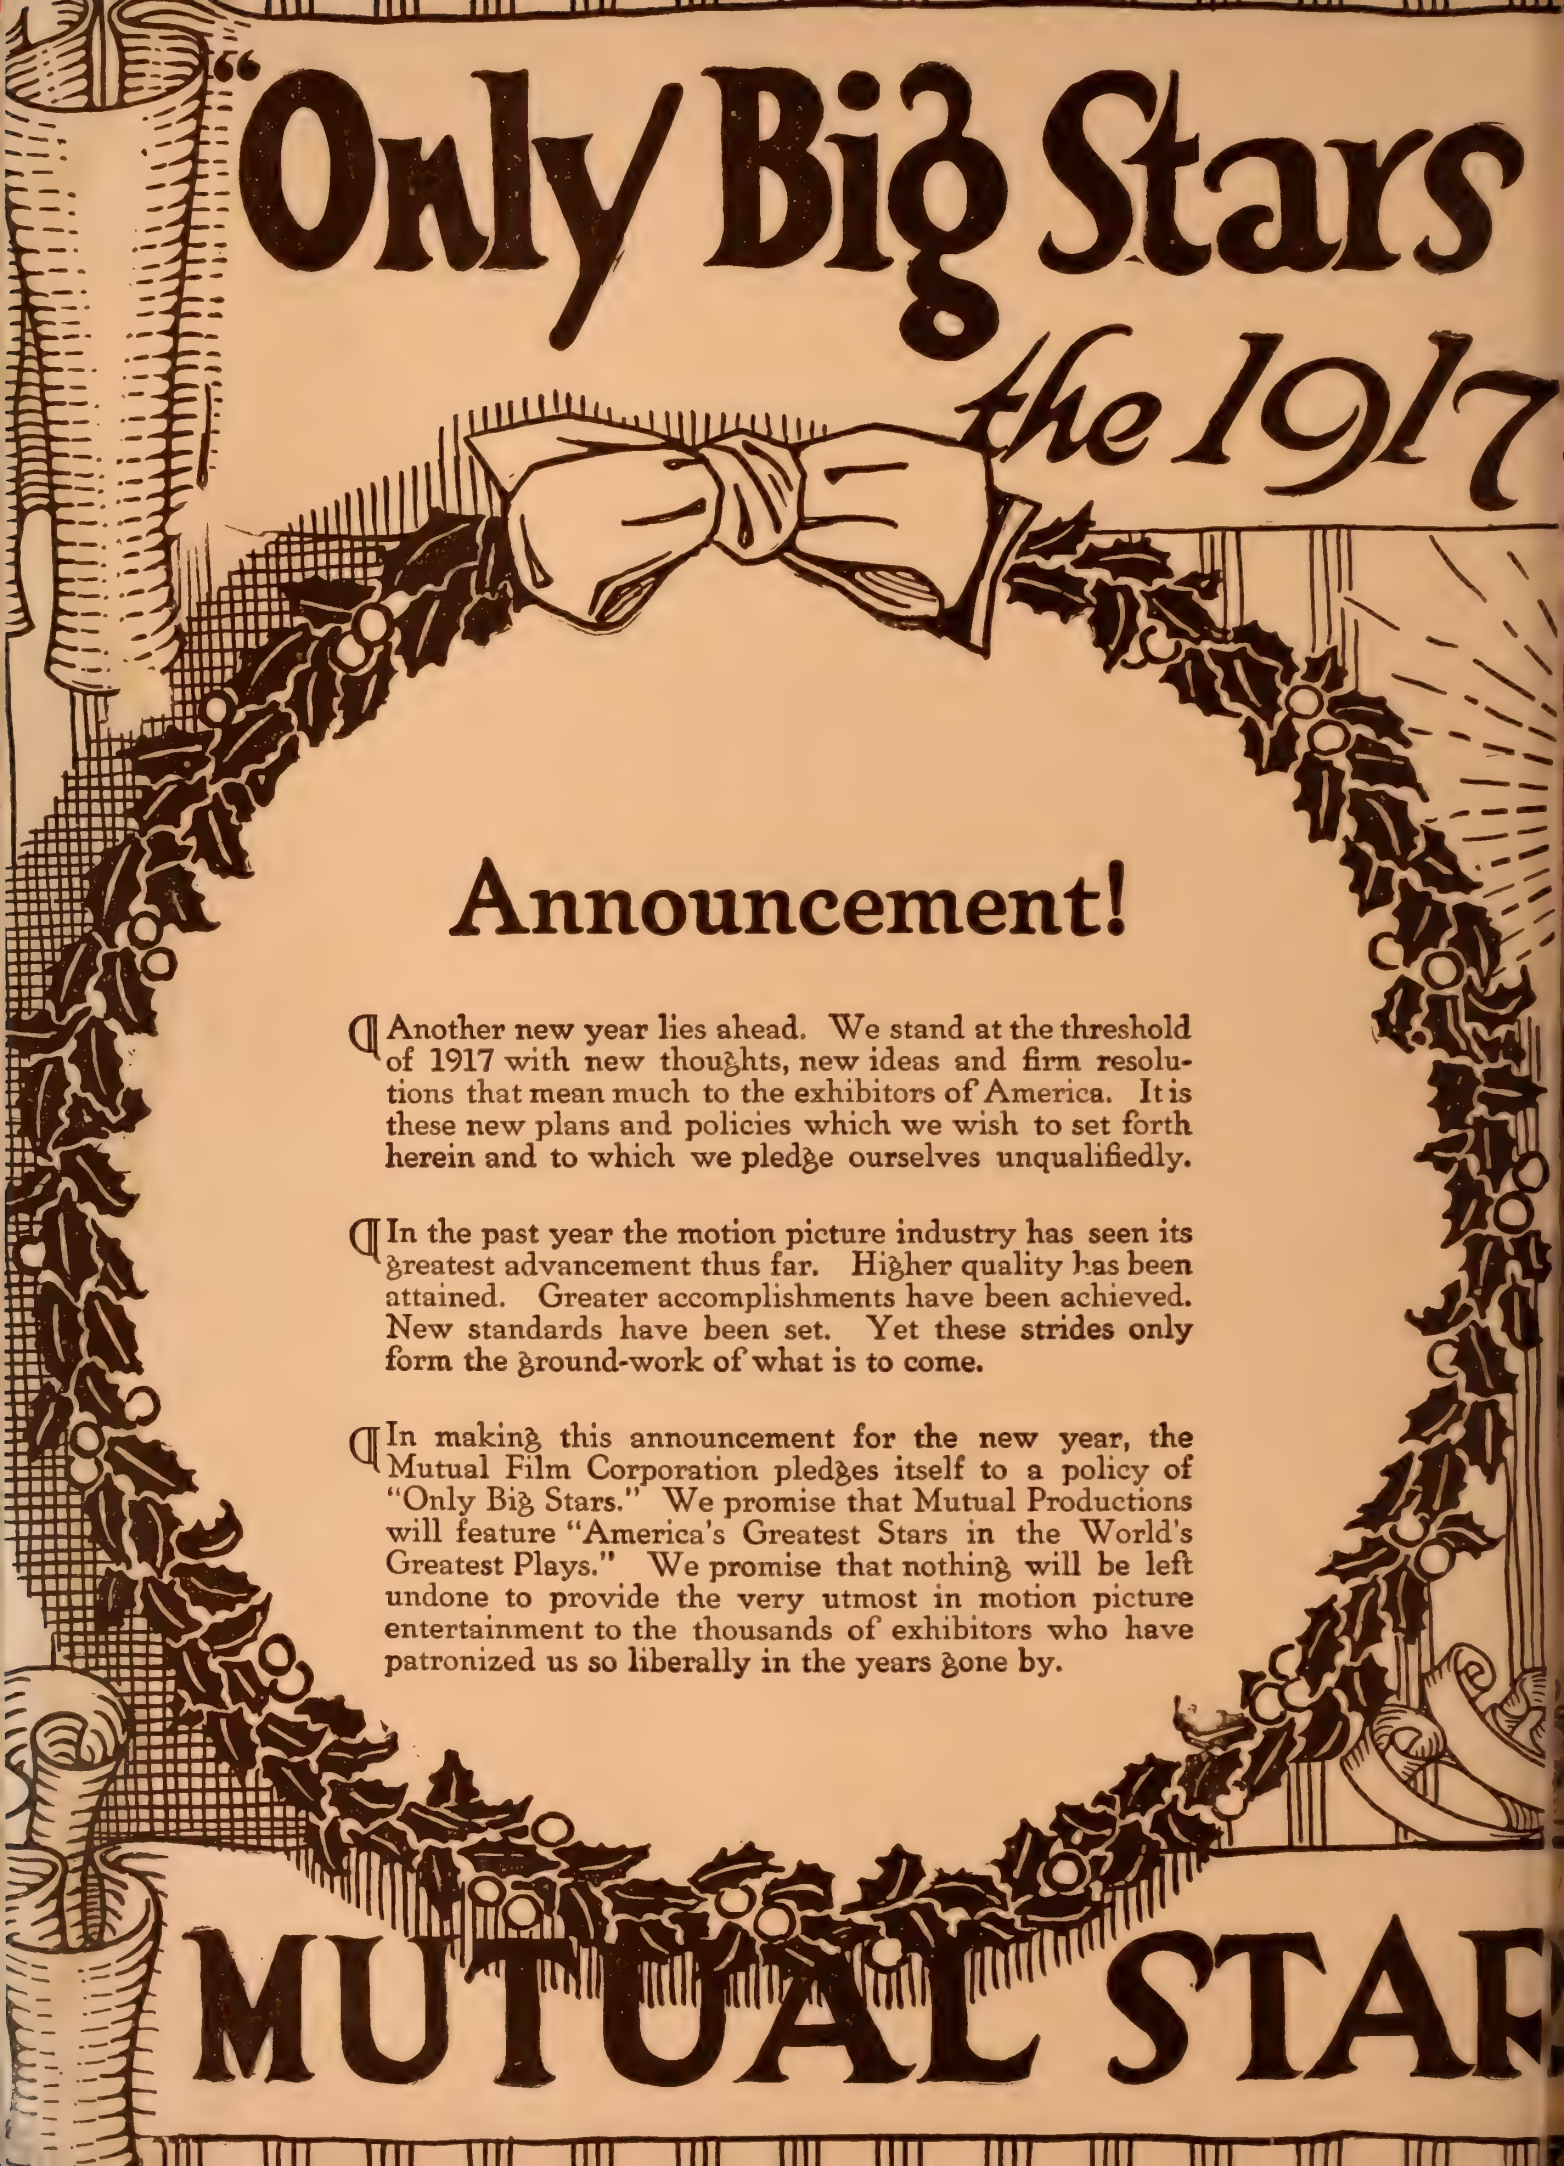
Exhibitors all over the country are reporting tremendous business with "The Vampires." This is the sensational series of mystery-detective tales made by Gaumont. It is being released through the 68 Mutual Film Exchanges. Audiences are amazed and delighted with the odd incidents depicted in the film. There is a surprise in every chapter. Bookings can be arranged at your nearest Mutual Film Exchange.

MARY MILES MINTER IN "THE INNOCENCE OF LIZETTE" IS AT BEST

DAINTY Mary Miles Minter—"America's Darling"—is at her best as the featured star of the Mutual Star Production scheduled for release the week of December 25th. "The Innocence of Lizette" is the title. James Kirkwood is the director. The picture was made at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, California. The little tale unfolded is a story of innocent childhood. It is as sweet as a breath of Springtime.

The Story in Brief.

In brief the story tells how Lizette, the child of an old actor, is left in the care of a motherly old lady at the death of her parent. Early in life Lizette becomes an assistant to the son of her foster-mother, at the latter's news stand in a big office building. There she meets and falls under the spell of a gentleman-crook, who to her appears a beau ideal. Still later an aged millionaire, with offices in the building, observes and is fascinated by Lizette. He had lost a little daughter who much resembled her. In time he seeks to adopt Lizette and is successful in his plan. Months later the girl goes on a visit to her foster-mother. The sudden illness of her adopted parent results in Lizette's return to the millionaire's palace. On the steps she finds a baby. In her innocence she takes the infant within and claims it as her own. The millionaire is horrified. He asks regarding the child's father. Lizette is momentarily dumb. Then she recalls the gentleman-crook she had once admired. Unthinkingly she gives his name. The millionaire investigates. Just as the gentleman-crook is about to levy blackmail upon the millionaire, the real mother of the child calls to reclaim it. Lizette's innocence is established, and everyone is happy.



Star Is Wholly Delightful.

Mary Miles Minter as Lizette is wholly delightful. The supporting cast is most evenly balanced. Perfect direction and photography make the release a notable one. Bookings can now be made at any Mutual Film Exchange. This is the fifth of the Mary Miles Minter Mutual Star Productions. The others are "Youth's Endearing Charm," "Dulcie's Adventure," "Faith" and "A Dream or Two Ago." Mutual exchanges can supply them all.

Who Wins $10,000?

Scenario writers and their friends are packing theatres the country over to see who won the prize for the best sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky." Exhibitors showing it consider it a better buy than U. S. Steel.

"Only Big Stars the 1917

Announcement!

¶ Another new year lies ahead. We stand at the threshold of 1917 with new thoughts, new ideas and firm resolutions that mean much to the exhibitors of America. It is these new plans and policies which we wish to set forth herein and to which we pledge ourselves unqualifiedly.

¶ In the past year the motion picture industry has seen its greatest advancement thus far. Higher quality has been attained. Greater accomplishments have been achieved. New standards have been set. Yet these strides only form the ground-work of what is to come.

¶ In making this announcement for the new year, the Mutual Film Corporation pledges itself to a policy of "Only Big Stars." We promise that Mutual Productions will feature "America's Greatest Stars in the World's Greatest Plays." We promise that nothing will be left undone to provide the very utmost in motion picture entertainment to the thousands of exhibitors who have patronized us so liberally in the years gone by.

MUTUAL STAR

For Mutual"

Policy

¶ We promise to prove that the confidence placed in us by the exhibitors of America has not been misplaced—that from it has sprung a feeling of loyalty and zeal that can result only in greater co-operation, greater productions, greater profits to those Exhibitor friends.

¶ Pledging ourselves to this new policy for 1917—"ONLY BIG STARS FOR MUTUAL" — we announce herein a few of the stars who will appear in the new Mutual Star Productions:

"DESSERT IN THE THEATRICAL BILL OF FARE"

Most people consider dessert the best part of the meal. That is why the Gaumont Company knows exhibitors everywhere will echo the words of this successful program-maker:

"Gaumont single-reels are truly as dessert in any good theatre's bill of fare. The traditional Gaumont quality in photography and Gaumont thoroughness in treatment characterize them all."

Every spectator finds things of interest in these weekly releases. They are carefully edited to make their appeal general.

WONDERS OF ALASKA DEPICTED ON TALLY'S BROADWAY SCREEN

Splendid Travel Film Takes Audience Far Into Interior of Northern Country

By George St. George

TALLY'S BROADWAY THEATER is showing some wonderful Alaskan pictures this week. In a travel film that carries one far into the interior of this interesting country, one is taken over rickety bridges, high above roaring rivers, through deep woods and finally to the bank of a river, on the opposite side of which is one of the great glaciers.

Even in repose this is a wonderful sight, the grandeur of the great mountains of snow and ice is impressive, but as one looks huge masses of ice break away from its sides and go crashing down into the waters below. Thousands upon thousands of tons of ice seems to melt into glistening flakes like the Bridal Veil falls at Niagara, taking all sorts of graceful forms as it drops and sending columns of white spray into the air as it hits the water.

The water, after the fall of the ice, reminds one of the rapids at Niagara, magnified many times, as it seethes and boils from the lashing of the ice. They are very wonderful pictures, far ahead of anything of the kind that have been shown before.

The feature attraction is Ruth Roland in Sultana, a hand-colored Pathe feature. Sultana is a valuable diamond that has been stolen and around the theft, and others that follow, the story is written. The picture does not come up to the Pathe standard. The story is thin and silly and the direction is away below par. A great many of the scenes are pretty in their coloring, but this department also falls below the standard set by The Beloved Vagabond at this same theater some time ago.

"THE LIBERTINE" A COMPELLING PHOTOPLAY

Powerful Lesson Taught by Film at Park Theatre for Every Mother and Girl—Excellent Cast in a Capable Production

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY

"THE LIBERTINE," the great photoplay now on at the Park Theatre, is not an ordinary moving picture. On the other hand, it is a most extraordinary one, not alone in its scenic excellence, but in the object it has before it, which is none other than the teaching of what is, perhaps, the most important lesson, or combination of lessons, that the young women of the Great City need to learn.

"The Libertine" is doing—and doing grandly—the work each mother should do for her own daughter, and each father for his own son.

It is teaching the girls that the world is full of scoundrels, of the male persuasion, who make it a business, by the help of honeyed words and all sorts of hypocritical pretensions, to decoy inexperienced young girls from home and mother, from purity and happiness, down the perfumed, be-flowered pathways that end in hell.

Jim Mills is but a type of thousands of vampires who are daily destroying the bodies and souls of unsuspecting young women, playing upon their youth, innocence and confidence until they are fairly in the spider's web, ruined and miserable.

TRUTH A BLESSING.

It doesn't hurt anybody to be brought face to face with the truth, especially when all that life is worth living for is at stake; and I would enjoy nothing more than the thought that every young girl in the Greater City is to see "The Libertine."

It would open their eyes. It would make them sit up and think—in a word, it would forewarn and forearm them for the time when they may run across just such soulless scamps as this same Jim Mills.

There is altogether too much mock modesty in the world. Life itself is GRIMLY REAL, and its laws keep on with the remorselessness of Juggernaut. There is a law as rigid as that by which the planets swing, and here it is: "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

There it is, and there it will stand, eternal, unyielding, and, putting all so-called "delicacy" and "modesty" aside, parents should flatly inform their children just what they may expect if they break this law.

It does no sort of good for the mother, after her daughter has been ruined, to pray to God or to curse. Let her, while her daughter is with her and while she is still sweet and innocent, tell her all about the world into which she is soon to enter, its temptations, its pitfalls and snares, and how she must conduct herself if she would escape the traps that will be set for her.

DUTY OF MOTHER.

To do this is, perhaps, the most pressing and important duty that falls to the mother, and if she fails to measure up to her solemn responsibility she is false to the holiest side of her motherhood.

Get busy, mothers, and as a kind of preparatory exercise, go and see "The Libertine." If that doesn't wake you up nothing will.

It is, indeed, an eye-opener! You can't get away from it. It grips you and holds you until you are mad through and through, not only with Jim Mills, but with the lazy, careless, thoughtless mothers who fail to safeguard their daughters' happiness by allowing them to go out into the world ignorant of its dangers and unprepared against its wiles.

Messrs. Steger and Golden deserve the sincerest thanks of all lovers of girlish innocence and purity for having conceived and placed upon the screen their wonderful and much-needed play.

HAS ARTISTIC EXCELLENCE.

Quite aside from the high purpose served by "The Libertine." It is well worth seeing as an illustration of the perfection of the motion-picture art.

Simply as a production it is great, immense The genius of Mr. Mason as Jim Mills and the exquisite acting of Miss Hanlon as Elsie Corwin create the nucleus of an almost perfect entertainment.

I feel that I will have to go again to see "The Libertine." It is too big to take in at one sitting. The main impression made upon me by the play I have given, but there are other features that I must see and study later on.

Success to the great production, and of the good that it aims to do may there be no end.

MERRY BOX-OFFICE!

¶ We wish our readers, and the industry in general, a Merry Box-office! This seems considerably nearer the point than the customary Yuletide greetings.

¶ A merry box-office will assuredly make a happy new year.

¶ To mention a few of the participants in this wished-for bounty, we might cite—exhibitors, distributors, producers, directors, actors and actresses, photoplaywrights, cameramen, studio managers—but then there are more than one hundred thousand persons in this industry, including ourselves.

The Open-Faced Era

PERHAPS the most optimistic observation one might make of this industry, as it stands today facing 1917, is the fact that its leaders are open minded.

A few years ago—a year ago even—many were inclined to deliver dictums—and there was an end of it. Today they are asking questions.

Which is as it should be. Decay comes to a man, a firm, and a nation when either shuts its ears and becomes introspective.

This industry is greater, in concept, than is any one in it. It pulls us all along far more than any of us pull it.

Great things are going to happen in 1917—great, shaping policies and growths. But, frankly, none of us know just what they will be.

We Resolve

WHILE we are New Year resoluting for other people, we might also set ourselves down in black and white.

This then we resolve: We shall get out this year more than ever before—a service paper. Service to the exhibitor—news service, booking service, advertising service, technical service, music service—in short box office service, from cover to cover of the publication.

This policy we shall pursue in an utterly impersonal, independent manner. We are tied to no one, no branch, no organization of the industry. We are unbiased and that sets a positive value upon our opinions, whether they are right or wrong. Nothing whatever can limit our service except our own capabilities and the size of our publication.

In this service to the exhibitor of pictures, in helping construct his business and his theatre, we are, we believe, giving the best possible service to the manufacturer, to the distributor and to the industry in general.

Keep the Ball Rolling

THE motion picture business is very much like the banking business—in one particular. The more one knows about it the less definite becomes that knowledge.

A Scotch physician once said that the study of banking systems had driven more men insane than any other kind of mental application.

As prognosticators, we take off our hats to no one. That is a pet function which no editor likes to give up. And whenever we note a dark corner we certainly intend to let our editorial light shine upon it.

At the same time we are anxious to preserve our sanity. So we shall open wide our columns this year and let all who wish to speak define the future of the industry as they see it.

Our "Keep the Ball Rolling" articles were started for this very reason. The series is highly successful because, judging from comments, these remarkable articles are being widely read and quoted. They are highly constructive, too, we believe, because they are fearless.

Let them come along. You can say just what you have on your mind.

We Would Like for Christmas

BETTER screen stories.

Well known authors to create for the screen.

Less problem pictures.

Directors who prove their worth by their work, not by their salaries.

Less superlatives,—much less—in picture advertising.

VOL. XIV December 30, 1916 No. 26

Our Candidate is Mr. Trigger

NO words of ours are necessary, we believe, to assure the election of Sam H. Trigger to the presidency of New York Local No. 1 of the Exhibitors' League. As the father of the organization and the constant force behind it his election would simply be a matter of putting the organization under the same leadership which caused its being and whatever strength it has had. We predict his almost unanimous election and thereafter a closer harmony between all of the Greater New York locals.

Red Posters and Gray Stories

NEXT week we will publish a very remarkable letter from Minneapolis, telling of conditions in the big and potential Northwest. According to the writer, conditions are bad.

It is difficult, it would seem, for Minneapolis exhibitors to say "Merry Christmas" to each other when the vaudeville houses are packed to overflowing, leaving downtown picture theatres just holding on and neighborhood theatres slipping on the grade.

The reason for the failing audiences in picture theatres, says the writer, is that "there is too much red in the posters and too much gray in the stories."

The line is so good that we couldn't wait to publish it. Watch for the letter—next week!

The Educational Picture

THE Sunday closing agitation among the picture theatres of New York state will result eventually, many opine, in the general use of educational pictures in Sunday programs.

Which, it would seem, will prove beneficial to educational pictures and to the picture theatres.

There are other indications that the educational picture is coming into its own. Live exchanges are booking them in connection with dramatic pictures to top a program. The newest and best photoplay houses feature them.

We have yet to see an audience which failed to enthuse over a good educational subject. Broadway audiences seem positively to hail them with delight.

The Advance Deposit

THE plan to do away with advance deposits by bonding Exhibitors' League members or creating through them a trust fund to protect the exchanges has an obvious danger. This is apt to finance the speculative, bad-credit exhibitor at the expense of his association members. It transfers the risk the exchanges have had to meet back to the reputable exhibitors.

This abolition of the advance deposit system is a very important problem. It should be settled by and through the National Association.

The whole question of advance deposits is one of finance, and of credit. The difficulty of gauging the resources of a motion picture exhibitor by the usual financial methods complicates this problem to a degree that stuns the ordinary intelligence of man. If the exhibitor's credit is to be examined into, then also the producer's credit should bear inspection.

It seems to us on these grounds there is no solution other than to combine the principles of other business. And if this would mean that the producer would be forced to consider not only whether one picture will be paid for, but whether all pictures will be paid for, and thus give attention not mechanically to signing a contract with the exhibitor first willing to meet the highest price, but to securing a permanent and creditable outlet for his product continuously, it would be a cause for rejoicing.

It would incidentally help to do away with the abuse of having the control of film franchises handled from headquarters by men who in some cases know very little of local conditions. Yes, in most cases, if the word of many responsible exhibitors is to be accepted.

That an organization composed of all the interests allied with the film industry can more fairly and equitably settle this vital question, if it can be settled, than an organization of exhibitors alone, or an organization of producers alone, would seem clear. The National Association is such an organization, and if an adjustment of credits between the film producer and the exhibitor is to be made, who better can handle the situation?

We have had so many complaints from exhibitors on this mooted question that something must be done. For as it is the deposit system works a hardship in favor of the big exhibitor against the little exhibitor.

The Passing of the Reel

AMONG the hopeful signs of the new year is the doing away—by one company, at least, the Essanay—of the word and arbitrary measurement called the reel.

As someone has said—we believe it was S. L. Rothapfel—the reel is a device on which film is wound—that's all!

The reel, as an arbitrary measurement, has spoiled many a good story—padding it out drearily to meet long measure, or telescoping it sadly to meet short measure.

Imagine stage plays run regardlessly in twenty or thirty minute acts and chopped off by the clock; or magazine stories fitted arbitrarily to the page size.

Next in order is the proper use of the word: feature.

With the Gloves Off

THE reader will find some worth-reading, worth-saving articles in the following pages of this issue. We asked the writers to dispense with the usual once-a-year messages, and talk business. We invited them to take the gloves off and go at it, saying what they had on their mind to say. And they have done so.

Wm. A. Johnston.

LEANING ON THE EXHIBITOR: ARE YOU?

By William A. Johnston

THE other day I asked a "big calibre" man who has lately entered the industry what he considered to be its main fault.

Such a man's estimate—fresh, unbiased, able, comprehensive—ought to have value.

He answered without hesitation: "the industry—the whole industry—is leaning on the exhibitor."

This is what he meant:

In other industries—not so great as this—the maker and jobber of goods keep a keen eye on the retailer's welfare. Many and many a single manufacturer is spending hundreds of thousands a year in helping the retailer sell his—the manufacturer's—goods.

This is the very note—the dominant policy—of modern—and successful—business methods.

It's all simple enough.

A manufacturer can't make goods right along—profitably, if the retailer doesn't sell them right along—profitably.

Therefore the manufacturer keeps his business eye constantly on the retailer. You might say that he builds his whole business policy from the retailer back to himself—never from himself outward so that, right or wrong, it leans on the retailer.

First, he's got to make a salable article—something the retailer's customers really want. He senses public demand; he keeps the product standard in quality.

Secondly, he's got to get it to the retailer—through the distributor—at a profit-making price—to all concerned.

Thirdly—and most importantly—after he gets his product to the retailer he's got to keep it moving, keep it selling right along. And this he does through that great, indispensable selling force—ADVERTISING.

He helps the retailer—he makes him—advertise. He doesn't ask him, or pray to him, or expect him, or wait for him—to advertise—He stands shoulder to shoulder with the retailer and actually helps him advertise his—their—goods.

The goods, you see, are still their's—the maker's and retailer's alike—until the final sale to the public.

There's no buncombe about this—no theory without practice.

Go into any advertising agency and you will find the staff busiest at devising new store helps, new store selling devices—all to the end of helping the retailer sell more of the maker's goods. The agency's clients—the manufacturers—are insistent about this service.

And consider the automobile industry—the one business whose evolution has paralleled so closely, and just previously, that of the picture industry.

Its one outstanding policy this year is—helping the agent.

The automobile manufacturer used to make his price—his price and terms—and then say to the agent: "take it or leave it."

And such was the scramble for cars—quite like the star picture situation today—that the agent bent his back and took the maker's burden.

Today the makers are "making it easy" for the agent to get and sell cars. It's a case of their car—till the customer buys it.

So that's what the "big calibre" man meant.

We are "leaning on the exhibitor" today.

Not intentionally. Never before have the manufacturers been so willing to co-operate. They are eager to.

So eager, indeed, that they go about it the wrong way. They hasten to contribute liberally to anything run in the name of the exhibitor—often when they positively can't afford it, and don't believe in it.

But donations are about the last thing needed today.

This is the fifth industry. If it is leaning on the exhibitor, it is leaning in a mighty broad and basic fashion. The fault is big, deep and grave. Kind words in general and donations at a few points won't put a dent in the situation.

The only way to help the exhibitor is at his box office.

Are you—the manufacturer—making pictures the public wants?

Are you getting them to the exhibitor through the most economical channels?

Are you helping the exhibitor resell your pictures to the public—regarding them honestly as your pictures all the time the exhibitor rents them?

Are you saving money on production—as well as on distribution—so that you can really help the exhibitor help himself?

Are you standardizing your product? Are you censoring your pictures?

If not, then, in some measure you are leaning on the exhibitor.

You offer the exhibitor your personal friendship.

There's a saying: Heaven protect us from our friends. The exhibitor has too many friends today—too many leaning friends.

There's only one way to stop the leaning, to make the industry stand upright, and that is to correct it, economically and with modern business regulations, from the ground up.

Of these business regulations the first and foremost is helpful cooperation between the maker and the exhibitor—or retailer—of pictures.

¶ A manufacturer can't make goods right along if the retailer doesn't sell them right along.

¶ In the automobile industry the manufacturers are scrambling to help the agents.

¶ Film producers are helping, but in the wrong way.

WHAT THE EXHIBITOR WANTS

An Interview with Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company

WHAT does the exhibitor want more than anything else in the world? Does he want splendid features, replete with dramatic suspense and lightning action? Does he want stars whose names are household words? Does he want open booking, program booking? Does he prefer advance deposits, or no deposits at all? Does he want comedy, tragedy, or—well, what does he want?

The answer to all of these interesting questions, says the president of the largest film manufacturing establishment in the world, is amusingly brief and simple. It might even indicate that the exhibitor is grasping, greedy, self-centered.

"Go directly to the heart of every exhibitor," said Mr. Laemmle, "and he will tell you what he wants. His answer will be burdened neither with high flown sentiment nor pretty flowers. What every exhibitor wants is an opportunity to make more money. He would like to go back to the days when the entries in his bank book were made in blue ink instead of red. He would like to ride in his own automobile again instead of the street cars.

"Of course the exhibitor realizes that something is wrong. He reads all about the big issues that are troubling the great minds of the industry, and he says, 'Splendid, indeed! But where is my next month's rent coming from? What am I going to say when the exchange bill comes due? And the salaries of my operator, and ushers and cashier?'

"You have asked me what I would want more than anything else if I were an exhibitor. That is my answer. I would want an opportunity to make more money.

"But I am not an exhibitor. I am a producer, and now you would like to know what I think ought to be done to help the exhibitor make more money. Several things ought to be done; in fact, several things must be done.

"Let me ask the exhibitor a point-blank question. What does he mean when he says, 'Thank the Lord, the old days are safely passed!' Does he realize that he was actually making money in the old days? Does he realize that with a house half the size of the one he owns now his net receipts were higher than they are now? I don't mean gross receipts. I mean net receipts.

"I don't want anybody to have the notion that I am one of these old fashioned folks who talk about the good old days as if they were a sort of heavenly blessing. My critics will say, 'If the old days were so good, why don't you go back to them yourself?' My answer is very trite: I would if I could, but I can't. My first duty is to give the exhibitor what he thinks he ought to have. That is what I am doing now. The exhibitor wants features of four and five reels, with stars. But that is not an indication that I believe in four and five reel features, with stars. My second duty is to induce the exhibitor to use what I think he can make the most money with.

"My chief objection to feature films is an old one. We all know how unpleasant it is to go into a theatre in the evening and find that a five-reel feature is partly shown. The great delight of the theatre in the old days was its continuous entertainment. You could go in any time. We must go back to the single and two reel picture.

"There is another objection to the five-reel feature. The word feature has grown to mean absolutely nothing. There are more than fifty features made each month. The cheapest theatres run them. The saddest part about the five-reel picture is that nine out of ten stories that are used do not justify a length of five reels. A five-reel story is a rarity.

"Screenable stories are not rare in themselves. Just as long as dozens of popular magazines can be published month after month, each containing from five to twenty short stories, there will be plenty of material for photoplays. There will be an excess of material, in fact, but it is one-reel material.

"In time, the star-picture will go out of existence, not only because stars' salaries account for the present exorbitant cost of films, but because the principle of the star-picture is radically wrong. I claim now, as I have always claimed, and always will claim, that the story is the thing, and not the star. Does the exhibitor want to make more money? Very well, let him banish the star-picture.

"In going back to the money making days of the one and two reeler, we must look ahead, too. I refer now to advertising. To sell films to the public, they should be advertised as any commodity. Commodities are sold nationally and locally by associating the manufacturer's name, which means his reputation, with the product. Successful campaigns of that nature mean a large public demand for the commodity.

"The exhibitor ought to realize this. But does he? Every manufacturer who has attempted national advertising will tell you the same story.

"It is amazing to note how few exhibitors mention the manufacturer's name when advertising the productions shown at their theatres.

"If it is injurious or dangerous for the exhibitor to advertise a trade-marked product, then the entire present system of merchandising is wrong!"

¶ The exhibitor must go back to the old days if he wants to make money.

¶ We must banish the five-reel feature.

¶ We must go back to one and two reel pictures.

¶ We must do away with stars.

¶ National and local advertising must harmonize.

EDISON TALKS OF THE FUTURE

An Exclusive Interview

THOMAS A. EDISON is not well pleased with the moving picture situation. While others share his feeling, and share it for, perhaps, the same reasons, Mr. Edison's beliefs, his suggestions, his predictions, must be taken at their full value. He is a long-distance thinker. His percentage of accuracy in forecasting great events and important changes of any kind outranks that of any American.

He was the first to prophecy the electric light, the phonograph, the motion picture; and he has been instrumental to a further degree in carrying out those prophecies than any American. For that reason alone his opinion is weighty.

Thomas Edison typifies the great American of to-day. There is a popular misbelief that great Americans are inaccessible; that they are difficult men to meet and talk to. The men who have nothing to say to great Americans are responsible for that rumor.

In the case of Mr. Edison, that belief has taken the form of a tradition. Newspaper interviewers bring back the report that the great inventor refuses to grant an audience; that he postpones interviews week after week; that he is surrounded by a bulwark of secretaries whose sole occupation is warding off ambitious journalists.

Perhaps that is true. We did not find it true, and the reason, we think, is that Mr. Edison believed that the Motion Picture News could convey his utterances to a more intelligent and representative audience than any publication in the field. In fact, that is what Mr. Edison told us.

He was working in the little brick laboratory upon one of his endless experiments when the reporter from the News arrived, and he got to the subject without any more time wasted than that consumed in washing his hands.

"To tell you the truth," he said, "I am quite a little disappointed in the trend that the films are taking. In fact I had, until quite recently, almost decided to have no more to do with them. The impulses of the industry seem to be so spasmodic. There are no signs of integration, of a getting together. There doesn't seem to be much level-headed thinking being done, it seems to me. Every man is for himself. Why can't there be more team work?

"Of course, as a producer in the old days, my interest tends now towards production, and production problems. There are a great many! I visited one of the theatres the other night, and what did I see acting on the screen? Sticks! Where are moving picture actors and actresses? Why, there aren't any! A producer nowadays hires people with nothing more than names.

"The moving picture actors and actresses of tomorrow are undiscovered. In time there will be a gradual sifting down. Unique qualities are demanded by the screen, and the stage is not supplying them. In a few years we will have men and women who are trained for the screen from their youth. They will develop a desire for their art at infancy, just as a painter or a poet develops his instincts in youth.

"I do not believe in five-reel pictures. Three reels is the ideal length. With three reels, perhaps two, there can be no padding. For dramatic pieces the two and three reel picture will survive. The five-reel play is a fad, as slapstick comedy is a fad. Both will pass on.

"The theatre owners—the exhibitors—were rather hasty, I think, in condemning school shows and church shows. The exhibitor has been trained to fear and fight anything which has savored of competition. He fails to realize that moving pictures in schools and churches would stimulate the interest in pictures generally; that, before long, the public which now looks down upon the film would sense its remarkable appeal. His patronage would be broadened. I am sorry that exhibitors feel the way they do. I think they will change their minds when conditions become more settled.

"Did it ever occur to you that people don't like to be educated by force? My suggestion of education by means of film was taken too literally. People had an idea that film education might be crammed down their throats. That was not my intention at all. The eventual picture—the popular film of the distant future—will have what we might call an educational tone. It will not be labeled educational.

"Within a year or two I hope to have moving picture opera to offer the public. Our limitations at present are those due to the phonographic receiver. The compass of the receiver is not great enough to include a grand opera stage. We have not quite overcome the obstacle of distance as yet. That is one of the difficulties that time and effort will remedy.

Mr. Edison believes that the moving picture will never die. He is still enthusiastic over its possibilities. Its future lies before it in a straight, well-defined path; but it will not begin to measure the future until it finds the path. And its feet, as well as its head, he thinks, are high in the clouds.

¶ Why can't there be more team work?

¶ The five-reel play is a fad.

¶ Exhibitors condemned school shows too hastily.

¶ People don't like to be educated by force.

WHY PROGRAM BOOKING IS IMPERATIVE

An Interview with W. W. Hodkinson, President of the Triangle Distributing Corporation

IS program booking an answer to the question of successful exhibiting, or is it a menace? Does the path to fat box office receipts lie through expert selection of pictures by a distributing organization, or personal selection by individual theatre owners? In a word, is program booking more desirable to the exhibitor from a purely box office standpoint than open booking?

W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation and of Superpictures, Inc., is one of the most ardent advocates and ablest defenders of program booking in the industry. His faith is intrenched in observations that represent years of experience not only as a distributing executive, but as an exhibitor and an exchange manager.

Mr. Hodkinson is in favor of program booking because his experience has emphasized its importance in successful exhibiting.

"A reliable program," said he, "eliminates fifty per cent of the worry from the exhibitor's mind. It insures consistency of quality to his patrons. It guarantees him from disappointments. And it insures a steady income.

"Ever since I have been interested in films my chief ambition has been to eliminate waste methods and confusion. It staggers the imagination to contemplate the results of open booking. If it were not for the steadying influence of programs the industry would be in chaos. I know what the conditions were before program booking made its appearance, and so do the exhibitors. A recurrence of that condition would mean industrial hysteria.

¶ The program eliminates fifty per cent of the exhibitor's worry.

¶ My future is staked on the success of program booking.

¶ Open booking would result in industrial hysteria.

¶ It is a cancer.

"The motion picture industry is rapidly approaching in importance and proportions the public utility stage. The day before yesterday I had occasion to talk with a business man in St. Louis. I put in my call with the telephone company and in less than half an hour the man I wanted was at the other end of the wire. That is what organization can accomplish. Can you imagine the difficulty I would have had if the telephone line to St. Louis had been owned by a hundred different concerns, each controlling a section of the circuit

"The channels through which the exhibitor would assemble his program if open booking should defeat program booking would correspond to the telephone line operated by a hundred different people. The service in both cases would be the same. That is to say, there would be no service.

"I have always had an ideal, well defined in my mind, regarding programs and program service. The substance of that ideal is service. But it is a glorified service compared with that which most program distributors are giving now. Superpictures are part of that ideal, yet they are only a step. My intention is not only to give the exhibitor the very best that producers have to offer, but to give it to him consistently.

"Excellent pictures and well balanced programs are, as I say, only the first step. The other steps are helpful, money-making aids to the exhibitor: advertising helps, assistance in getting the business out of the 'nickel' atmosphere, prevention of duplication with competitors, and genuine help by traveling representatives who are experts.

"I have staked my future on the success of program booking, because I am confident that it is the only way. I have declined one opportunity after another to take part in quick money schemes, not because I was afraid I would lose what I invested, but because I do not believe in them and I will not foster them. They are a cancer on the industry, and they really deserve surgical attention. It is only incidental that these 'Wallingford propositions' are all forced upon the exhibitor through open booking. When open booking stops, the cancers will automatically be cured.

"I have worked for certain results along certain lines with all conditions against me in the past. I have advocated and tried to force a condition of better houses, better methods and more than a nickel admission, when, quite frequently, the exhibitor and even the exchanges could not see the necessity for it. I could not see where these things could be avoided, and I believe in forcing conditions instead of letting conditions force me.

"I am for the program first, last and always, a program that could not be obtained except through the concerted support of a leading type of theatre throughout the country.

"There is just as much difference between such a method of procedure and so-called open booking as there is between government and anarchy. One depends upon a plan. The other lacks a plan. All big successes depend upon a plan of attack, an ideal towards which every effort gravitates. The career of motion pictures in the past has been shaped by magic, not by plan or ideal. In the future it must yield to the forces of cause and effect.

"Those are the reasons why the industry has not developed in a broad and powerful way. In the future we must lay plans and follow them faithfully. I think I have proved to you that open booking is the very opposite of a plan; that it lacks motive.

"Perhaps I shall make mistakes. But I shall not make the mistake of being without definite principles and policies, broad enough to meet the changign conditions in the business, and consistent with truth and honesty of purpose."

A BOMB FOR THE EXHIBITORS

A Remarkable Interview With S. L. Rothapfel

MR. EXHIBITOR—wake up! You are looking at your problems through the wrong end of the telescope. You are taking things for granted that ought to be thrashed out. You are letting men try to solve your problems who know nothing of your problems. You are allowing the producer to attempt working out your destiny by the application of general formulas. A general formula will never do it. The only man in the world who can make your theatre as successful as it ought to be, and can be, is yourself.

The best known exhibitor in the United States says these things, and he thinks it is time for you to realize them. Samuel Rothapfel thinks that you need a forty-two centimeter shell dropped in your midst. He believes that a nation-wide stirring-up is necessary, if you intend to progress.

Fasten your eye to the proper end of the telescope, says Mr. Rothapfel, and don't let any producer tell you how to run your business.

This interview took place the day following Mr. Rothapfel's announcement that he was through with program booking; that he intended to take precedent by the throat and launch his theatre upon what some people call "the precarious seas of open booking." Mr. Rothapfel's decision is momentous. Perhaps it is alarming. We all know that Mr. Rothapfel has nothing but contempt for precedent. We are equally aware that Mr. Rothapfel has built his remarkable success upon the wreckage of precedent. He believes that you can do the same thing. It is doubtful if Mr. Rothapfel has ever been so outspoken, so bluntly frank, in an interview.

¶ The principle of program booking is wrong.

¶ The typical exhibitor has the attitude of a beggar.

¶ The exhibitor must make his theatre an institution.

¶ I believe in extravagance. It pays.

"How in the wide world," demanded Mr. Rothapfel, "can a man sitting behind a desk in a New York office building know what the people want out in Boulder, Colorado; in San Francisco; in Toledo; in Portland, Maine? Each of these places presents its own unique problems. The man behind the desk is endeavoring to reduce exhibitors' problems to generalities, and he pretends to be able to solve them by broad formula. Don't you see how ridiculous that is on its very surface?

"I am opposed to program booking because its principle is wrong. The producer says to the exhibitor: 'Let me pick the pictures you shall use; rely on my excellent judgment; let me fill your house for you. I know how!' And the exhibitor, realizing that the man behind the desk probably has a salary of $25,000 a year and more, and, because of it, simply must know how, submits.

"I want to hammer this point home: The only man who can solve the exhibitor's problems is the exhibitor himself. In order to be successful, he must do away with the beggar attitude. Does that sound unpleasant? No exhibitor in the country, if he has red blood, will let you call him a beggar. A beggar! The very idea!

"Because the typical exhibitor is a red-blooded individual, I am speaking so frankly. The typical exhibitor does have the beggar attitude. He might just as well stand out in front of his theatre with a tin cup and collect the dimes and nickels from whoever cares to drop them in.

"There is only one way to eliminate the beggar attitude. That is for the exhibitor to revise his notion of his own theatre. The difference between the beggar attitude and the correct attitude can be expressed simply. It sounds like hair splitting, but it is not. Consider this difference carefully: The public now comes to his theatre to see the picture. Instead, they should come to the theatre and see the picture. There is a world of difference.

"I see no reason why two or three competing theatres in the same street cannot follow this plan and each be successful.

"I seem to have a reputation for extravagance. I believe in extravagance, not of money necessarily, but of ideas. Some day I am going to write a book on the virtues of extravagance. The small exhibitor cannot afford to be extravagant with his money, but he certainly can afford to squander a few ideas.

"I met a man from the Middle West a few months ago who told me he was losing money. He could not fill his house, although he was carrying the very best programs. I asked him a lot of questions about his conditions, and I found, as I expected, that he had the deplorable 'beggar attitude.' I pounded this theory of individuality, of the theatre as an institution, not as a mere showplace for films, into him for a couple of hours. He went back home with his point of view completely shifted around. He went after business aggressively. He forgot everything else but that one stubborn task of making his theatre develop a personality.

"The first thing that exhibitor knew, his house was beginning to fill up. He kept hammering away, trying out new stunts and discarding old ones. Today he has the best patronized theatre in a city of two hundred thousand. He is making money rapidly.

"Won't the exhibitor realize that that course is the only one which points directly towards success? He must cast off precedent. He must reverse his order of thinking. He must stop being passive and become aggressive. And about the first thing he will discover when enlightenment comes is that he, and not the $25,000 man behind the desk in New York, can make his theatre the success that it ought to be."

A RADICAL ENTERS THE INDUSTRY

An Illuminating Interview with R. A. Gradwell, Sales Manager, World Film Corporation

IT is to be expected that a man who can point to a record of achievement in an industry which is radically different from the motion picture industry will bring with him an equipment of ideas and ideals that are radical.

That statement has a familiar ring. We have heard it before. Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones came to the industry with just such radical ideas and with a successful business career behind them.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones lost their identity. Instead of adjusting the faulty conditions of the industry to suit their ideals, they distorted their ideals to fit the faults. It has happened dozens of times.

That is why those of us, who are anxious to see the motion picture muddle straighten itself out, are gazing with something akin to eager expectancy in the direction of the man who made the Oliver typewriter famous.

This man is a successful business man. He has come to the film industry from fresh and remarkable achievement. He employed in his sales force 11,000 men. He is accustomed to thinking big and doing big. He has tackled the motion picture muddle with a man-sized brain and a long-distance perspective. He says his ideas are not radical. After you have read what he has to say you can decide for yourself.

R. A. Gradwell is sales manager of the World Film Corporation. He hates trusts. He believes in competition. And you may not believe it, but he is modest.

"This business," said he, "of the executives of film companies getting into the limelight as if they were theatrical stars is wrong. It's ridiculous. Did you ever in your life hear of personal publicity helping a business man solve his problems? No sir, you never did!

"You say that I have come to this industry with radical ideas. None of my ideas are radical. In the first place they are not ideas; they are principles. They are the principles upon which successful business is based. The distribution problem of this industry seems difficult. We have heartless, malicious competition. What are we going to do about it?"

"In Syracuse, New York," we replied, "there are sixteen exchanges. Two or three would be sufficient. Why can't you persuade your competitors to join hands and work out this distribution problem together?"

"Join hands with my competitors!" he exclaimed. "Did Napoleon join hands with the Germans? Did you ever hear of a nation telling its enemy its plans? Competition is the foundation of good business. Why can't that rule apply in this industry as well as others? I hate trusts.

"The most difficult problem confronting us now is that of advance deposits. There has been a great deal of comment and complaint against them. I believe in the advance deposit, because it is necessary, imperative. On our shelves at this moment are films worth $5,000,000. It has taken us years to accumulate those films. We must be protected, and no man who knows the first thing about business can say that our advance deposit system is extortionate. If you were a contractor who wanted a government job, you would deposit at Washington a certified check with your bid. The Government dares not run risks with contractors. We dare not run risks with exhibitors.

"A parasite has attached itself to the original legitimate advance deposit system. That is the cause of all this squealing we hear. Feature film producers, with no working capital, demand large advance deposits from exhibitors. That is unfair to the legitimate manufacturer as well as to the exhibitor. It ties up the exhibitors' hard-earned money, and it provides an unfair competitor to us. When this producer has completed his 'special' he takes it to the exhibitor and says 'throw out the World film for this week, and substitute the "special."'

"Our advance deposit equals merely the cost of our program to the exhibitor for two weeks. If World service costs him $20 a week, the advance deposit is $40. I don't believe anyone can call that unfair. It's business, pure and simple.

"The most astounding thing I have discovered is the disloyalty of most producers to exhibitors. Let us say that John Doe owns the Theatorium in Chicago. He has been using the same service for years. In his small zone this exhibitor has built prestige for that company. Then, along comes a new theatre, with larger seating capacity. The new proprietor offers the producer three times as much for the service as John Doe was paying. And invariably the producer casts loyalty and old friendship to the winds, discards poor old faithful John Doe, and takes on the new theatre because of immediate profits.

"No one can build a solid, lasting industry on such rotten foundation as that. A sales organization—and it makes no difference what you are selling—must be built upon integrity and loyalty."

¶Film Executives get too much publicity.

¶I will not join hands with competitors.

¶I hate trusts.

¶The deposit system is imperative.

¶The disloyalty of producers to exhibitors is astounding.

¶No one can build an enduring industry on such rotten foundation.

¶I am not a radical.

SOME EVILS AND THEIR CURES

An Interview with Benjamin B. Hampton, President of the General Film Company

EVERYTHING that can be said upon the subject of motion pictures already has been uttered. The things which have been said can be phrased differently. They can be debated and denied. The only excuse for their repetition, says Benjamin B. Hampton, is that the most vital things may catch a new eye and amass more sentiment and greater impulse towards a certain definite good.

Mr. Hampton believes that a great many of the things which have been said are untrue. Mr. Hampton is one of the country's foremost business men. His qualities as an organizer are admired and respected. He has examined conditions in the film industry closely and accurately. As a business man and as a film executive, his remarks and opinions, uttered with the frankness which is his custom, are subject to no discount. He has a strong and positive belief in the immediate future of the film industry. Within five years, he predicts, the industry will be squarely and firmly upon its feet.

"Of course there is confusion in the film industry," said he. "There is bound to be confusion where lack of organization exists. But the time is passing when a stock jobber, a mining promoter, can jump in for a few months and jump out again, with a fortune. Most of the film men are of the hard-headed business man type, who have taken up their work because it presented the sort of tangles and obstacles that the American business man enjoys tackling.

"What is preventing these men from realizing their excellent ideas is that the business has run away with itself. They are gradually bringing it under control, and it is a tremendous task. There must be greater organization, more thorough elimination of waste motion and a complete shaking down and sorting out. Overproduction is one of the biggest problems. Three or four times the amount of pictures necessary are being turned out. Trying to keep track of production would make any man hysterical.

"Of course the exhibitor is bearing the brunt of the burden. Owning and operating a motion picture theatre is profitable—theoretically. Actually, you know just about how profitable it is. Exhibitors, unfortunately, have been trained to believe that the daily change of program is necessary. It is not necessary. It is ruinous! Because exhibitors insist upon changing their programs every day, and because producers continue to urge them to do so, exhibitors are losing money.

"The exhibitor who changes his program daily cheats himself. If his program is as good as it should be his patrons who see the pictures the first day will advertise it. That is the fundamental rule of advertising—to induce people to talk about something you have for sale. In the natural course of events his theatre will be well filled the second day. If the theatre is situated in a good neighborhood he can fill it easily the third.

"What a repeated program resolves itself into is more money for the exhibitor and more money for the producer, for the producer will realize much better returns from pictures which have a two or three day run in a single house than by renting them according to the present one-a-day schedule. With more money the producer can afford to make better pictures.

"I wonder if the exhibitors realize that they are being besieged by a terrible pestilence. I refer to what is ordinarily called the 'fan'—the motion picture fan. Exhibitors have the mistaken notion that the fan is the pulse of the public. Nine times out of ten the fan's opinions are wrong. The people upon whom the exhibitor must depend for his bread and butter are the quiet folks, the business man and his family, who pay their dimes to see his pictures and never utter a word of comment.

"Nothing could be more inaccurate, more absurd, than the opinion of a great many people that the motion picture industry is populated by blockheads and four-flushers. On every hand I hear people saying, 'Why on earth don't big calibre brains take a hand? Why don't honest men go in and clean up the awful mess?'

"I have indulged in more forms of business enterprise than falls to the lot of the average man. And I must say emphatically that I have never encountered men of greater integrity and ability than those who are now working out the problem of the motion picture.

"Our well intentioned critics would be enlightened if they made a comparative analysis of the film industry and the automobile industry. Ten years ago the public unanimously condemned the automobile as a fad. Automobile stock was more of a joke then on Wall Street than film stocks now are.

"I had lunch a few days ago with the head of one of Wall Street's most famous brokerage firms. This man told me that he staid awake nights calling himself names for not investing in automobile stocks when he had the opportunity! Through his investigations and efforts his concern had invested over $500,000 in film companies. Perhaps the money would be lost. At least he would have driven in a wedge. He would not lie awake nights, calling himself names, because he had neglected another good opportunity!"

¶ Overproduction is one of the biggest problems.

¶ Daily program change is ruinous.

¶ The motion picture "fan" is a pest.

¶ I have never met men of greater integrity and ability than are found in the film industry.

THE PERSONALITY IS THE THING

An Interview with Daniel Frohman

WHEN "The Prisoner of Zenda" first went on the road, its makeshift scenery was accepted. In those days a third or fourth rate actor could point dramatically to a soap box and say tremulously, "Yonder is the old well I knew so well in my childhood," and the audience would let him get away with it. Nowadays, let an actor, however dramatically, attempt such a thing, and his reward will be laughs of derision.

Why? There is no need to ask the reason. We all know that the pictures are responsible. After "The Prisoner of Zenda," in picture form, came back from the exchanges, tattered and torn, the road companies dared not tour the country again with their old scenery. They even carried, out of sheer necessity, a very realistic moat. But despite the convincing realism of the road piece, "The Prisoner of Zenda" could not "come back."

"Why?" repeats Daniel Frohman. "Why, because the road companies did not have James Hackett. The pictures did. The country knew that Hackett was the original prisoner of Zenda, and they refused to accept substitutes. A play, whether it is staged or screened, must have the magnetism that only a well-known actor or actress can give it to be successful. The quality which gives an actor magnetism is the quality that makes him successful. That quality is personality. Personality is the thing!

"The pictures have not driven stock companies and cheap road companies out of existence because they are cheaper. Not at all! The success of the films over the provincial stage came in the natural balancing of supply and demand. The people in small towns demanded personalities, and the screen willingly supplied them.

"Famous Players films were founded on that principle. We have adhered to it, and it is not necessary for me to tell you whether or not that principle has proved successful. Great stage successes prove that the star is the chief attraction. Out in the 'provinces' people can see Mary Pickford or Ethel Barrymore playing just as well as they play in the high-priced Broadway moving picture theatres.

"Naturally the screen as a form of theatrical entertainment came into direct contrast and conflict with the play in the playhouse. The drama, as drama, by competent actors can never be displaced by any form of theatrical competition. But the character of the drama can be largely affected by this new form of entertainment.

"The theatre, from the point of view of competition, has two essential factors to contend against in the screen world. One is the cheapness of admission. The other is the great vista, the broad horizon of humanity in smoothest action, and, of course, the outdoor activities, which cannot possibly be realized on the stage.

"But the theatre comes more closely, more vitally, in competition with the screen where individual players are concerned. I hate to hear anybody say that the pictures—usually they say 'those awful movies'—have driven the stock and road companies from the small cities because of their cheaper admission price. Without the personality picture I am quite sure that the films would never have come into sharp competition with the provincial stage. Great stars could never in their natural lifetime reach the millions if they attempted it through the medium of the speaking stage.

"The criticisms which are brought by the producers of starless pictures against the personality picture are ridiculous. I claim, with them, that a picture lacking in story values will be poor, no matter who the star may be. But their cry that a story written to order for a star must be poor—is absurd.

"I defy them to mention a single great dramatist who has not written plays to fit certain actors or actresses. Shakespeare did. Pinero was guilty of the offense. Moliere should also hang his head in shame—and Brieux, Maeterlinck, Shaw—indeed, who can you mention?

"Producers have been criticized for paying authors too little. Our well-meaning critics say that if a star is worth $2,000 a week, a story good enough for her is worth, let us say, $5,000. Understand, please, that I firmly believe in paying an author what his story is worth.

"Yet our critics do not understand that the scenario for a play and the scenario for a photoplay are two entirely different things. A playwright may make, if he is unusually successful, $50,000, and often much more, in royalties from a single production. The same playwright may receive $1,000 for a photoplay story. Now let us draw our comparison. The scenario for a play must be complete down to the finest detail. The stage director works directly from the script. The moving picture director, on the other hand, expands the raw material of his story. The story is merely the nucleus.

"But sifted down to its fundamentals, the great thing of the film is the star. The American audience clamors for magnetism—personality. And I believe in giving the American audience what it wants."

¶ The success of screen over stage is not due to cheap admission.

¶ Stage triumphs prove that the star is the attraction.

¶ The drama, as drama, can never be replaced.

¶ Mention a dramatist who has not written plays to fit stars!

¶ Increased stage salaries are due to the moving pictures.

¶ I believe in giving the audience what it wants.

THE EVILS OF CHEAP PRINTING

By Watterson R. Rothacker

THE other evening in New York I was talking with one of the oldest and most experienced distributors in the moving picture business. He recently had paid a fabulous sum for all rights to a big feature. With us was another man who had been on the road booking this feature.

The feature had been elaborately produced by a director of ability, who had an exceptional story, enacted by a popular star. The photography was excellent; the advertising had been extensive, and the sample print was splendid. So this really good picture was presented to prospective buyers and exhibitors via the sample print, and territorial sales were made throughout the country.

In the meanwhile bids were being considered for the printing of the necessary copies. The man considering bids knew the film business, but laboratory work to him was merely a combination of words. He listened to everybody and placed the business with the lowest bidder. About this time the people who had bought territories had arranged local trade showings and were clamoring for delivery.

Last hour shipments were hurried out and the buyers all over the country got their prints on the eve of their respective trade showings, upon which depended theatre bookings. The trade showings took place—and so did some fireworks. One buyer wired in "Print scratched and not up to sample. Many scenes and titles too light and some too dark. Rush new print immediately."

Another telegraphed "Picture all bawled up and dirty. Assembled so bad story lost entirely. Send print like sample quick."

Another wire read "Whatell. Print rotten. Colors spotted and streaked. Biggest scene missing. Come at once and bring new print."

And there were other wires and they all burned with criticism and complaint. What was the result? Everybody concerned was dissatisfied and angry and disgruntled. Money and opportunity were lost, the venture jeopardized, and feelings of injustice and ill-will arose like a barrier between the parties involved. And all because a man dickered to save about one-tenth of a cent per foot, or approximately one dollar a reel.

The man who does not realize that upon the quality of the print depends the financial and artistic success of any picture is the sort of chap who would buy a Twin Six, employ a liveried chauffeur, and then try to use city water instead of gasoline.

Do you realize that during this era of the high cost of almost everything the price of developing and printing, instead of rising with the times, has been cut, and cut, and cut again, until it is nearly down to the price which Mr. Eastman gets per foot for the raw stock?

We are not buying labor any cheaper. In fact, the thoughtful manufacturer has raised the pay of his employees so that they may be able to buy their daily bread. Have the prices of chemicals been lowered? Not on your life! They have skyrocketed way up into Vernon Castle's present sphere.

What about Metol? For a while it was fighting in Radium's class and just now is remotely sequestered in the land of the Kaiser or submarining in the holds of the Deutschland. And have the prices on dyestuffs and other materials used in developing, tinting and toning dropped? They have taken long leaps up into the air and some of the chemicals have leaped out of sight entirely.

We have found substitutes, but they are costlier by far than was the genuine. Hydroquinone used to come from Germany, and it did good work for us at a price of fifty cents a pound. Now it costs four times as much.

Since raw stock prices have remained the same and the cost of labor and material actually advanced, how can the drop in printing and developing prices be reasoned? Possibly it is because some manufacturers do not know how to figure costs and lose money accordingly. Perhaps some people are willing to operate at a loss in order to get work. Possibly there are a few manufacturers who are indifferent to quality. They are building on quicksand.

Now I'm here to tell you that the man who produces or buys or markets a picture should insist upon a definite and established standard of quality, sustained values, punctual deliveries and satisfying service. And he must be willing to pay a price that will permit the manufacturer to use proper materials, secure efficient workmanship and give an honest and careful screen examination to each and every reel of film before it is shipped.

Think it over, Mr. Man, and you will find that it it is the height of extravagance to permit anything to curtail the power of the goose that lays the silver dimes. Screen brilliancy, quality—squarely, fairly and properly priced—that's what you are entitled to and that's what you must have in order to play fair and safe with yourself and those who deal with you. If the price doesn't guarantee to the buyer the required quality and service, and to the manufacturer a fair profit, one or both are bound to lose, and when the buyer loses, the exchangeman, the exhibitor and the public loses in their turn, for a picture is no better than its appearance on the screen.

¶The man who neglects quality is the chap who would buy a twin six and try to use water instead of gasoline.

¶During this era of high prices the cost of printing has been cut and re-cut.

¶Many manufacturers know nothing of printing costs and are losing money.

Selznick Will Abandon Advance Deposit System

Motion Picture News Actively Instrumental as Exhibitors' Representative in Securing First Action by Manufacturer on Much-Discussed Subject

LEWIS J. SELZNICK has decided to abolish the system of advance deposits on all productions released by Selznick Pictures, Inc. This is the first announcement from any of the concerns which have been favoring advance deposits that the system had proved to be unfair to the exhibitor and should be discontinued.

For some time the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and Mr. Selznick have been in receipt of letters from exhibitors all over the country, protesting against the advance deposit system. Many of the letters received by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS were so emphatic in their protest against the advance deposit as an institution that William A. Johnston finally decided to take up the matter with Mr. Selznick, who has been one of the strongest advocates for advance deposits on expensive features.

Mr. Selznick had been deeply impressed by the many emphatic letters he also received, and, after a series of conferences with Mr. Johnston, he decided to abandon the advance deposit system in the immediate future.

"I admit that I have been one of the 'worst offenders,'" said Mr. Selznick later, in an interview with a reporter from the NEWS, "and after my talk with Mr. Johnston I was firmly convinced that the advance deposit system is entirely unfair to the exhibitor.

"You must understand, however, that the advance deposit system has been troubling me for some time. I have had it called to my attention by many people, and I have been severely criticized for demanding such large deposits. But I think the exhibitor should understand that in contracting the high salaried stars that are appearing in my program, I have taken heavy responsibilities on my shoulders. I have felt that I must have some protection, and in view of the large amount of money at stake I was compelled to resort to the advance deposit as the only adequate means of protection.

Exhibitors Were Unwilling

"When I made that decision I thought that the exhibitors would be anxious enough to pay deposits of almost any amount. And the success of the Clara Kimball Young pictures strengthened that decision. I want the exhibitors to understand that I am not by any means compelled or forced to discontinue the deposit system.

"My sole reason for doing it is a desire to treat the exhibitors squarely. With the money that he has been spending for doposits he will now be able to exploit his theatre. He can increase his advertising appropriation and he can bring more money into the box office.

"By returning the exhibitors' deposit money and by discontinuing further deposit collections, the exhibitor will be enabled to succeed. And I can only succeed if the exhibitors succeed. I do not intend turning the Selznick Pictures, Inc., into a charitable institution. I do intend to make it as square and honest a business organization as is in my power."

Mr. Selznick gestured in his characteristic manner toward a heap of letters from exhibitors. "These men—exhibitors—all claim that our pictures are going over in fine style. Most of the letters came as the immediate result of packed houses. Some of the letters say that the advance deposit is not fair, in spite of packed houses.

"I want them to know that if my attitude has been unfair, I am doubly anxious to correct it. I did not think it was unfair when I instituted it, but all of these letters and the letters that your magazine has received have led me to change my mind.

Protection All Around

"I am now working on a plan of protection which will not involve advance deposits of any kind. It will protect the exhibitor who is using my pictures, and it will protect me as well.

"As soon as the details of this plan are worked out I will announce it through the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Until that plan is ready to go into effect, which will be in a few weeks, the advance deposit system will continue. When that plan is announced, all advance deposits will be refunded.

"I am perfectly willing to talk with a committee of representative exhibitors on a new plan to take the place of advance deposits. But they must be representative men, men in whom I can repose my confidence."

Mr. Johnston has long been in favor of a discontinuance of the advance deposit system, and he has advocated this change editorially constantly. It is a fact worthy of note that exhibitors and producers alike realize that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is not only a reliable medium for the dissemination of authentic trade news, but that it is a powerful instrument in bringing the exhibitor and producer together for the settling of vital questions.

Committee Asks Keppler to Stop Ochs' Trial

Fleischman and Goldreyer's Attorney Says He Was Requested to Stop Investigation Because He Was "Injuring Reputation of League"

TOBIAS KEPPLER, who is prosecuting the charges of Fleischman and Goldreyer against Lee A. Ochs, and who asked for a postponement of the last hearing until he was given an opportunity to examine the minutes of the previous meetings, stated last Thursday for publication in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS that the real reason for his request for an adjournment was that he had been approached by members of the investigating committee with the request that he stop his prosecution.

"You can put this as strong as you want to," said Mr. Keppler. "I am just as anxious to carry on this investigation as I was before. But it is useless for me to proceed in the face of such an attitude on the part of the committee.

"The reason I gave for wanting a postponement at last Friday's meeting was that I had not been given the minutes of the previous hearings. The real reason for my requesting postponement was that I was approached by members of the committee before the meeting, and told that by my efforts to prove the charges of Fleschman and Goldreyer against Ochs, the league was getting in bad repute all over the country.

"The committee said that I was wrecking the organization. It has been intimated that I was receiving money and being actuated by outside interests. Nothing was farther from my intentions than bringing the organization into disrepute. As for my receiving money from outside interests, that charge is utterly groundless.

"The committee said that they would call upon me with a view to effecting a compromise with Fleischman and Goldreyer. My clients are willing to do this, but so far I have seen none of the committeemen. If they don't come around I certainly intend to carry on the investigation.

"So far I have not received the minutes, although I expect them today. I am ready to proceed with the investigation of Ochs whatever day the committee decides upon."

Secretary of League Shows Up Slush Fund Charge

P. J. Concannon, secretary of the Kansas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, who is in business at Emporia, Kansas, deserves credit for the manly fight he has made and is making against unfair criticism and accusation in Kansas and elsewhere, against the motion picture industry.

An article printed in the Emporia Gazette, William Allen White's famous publication, contained an editorial in which the charge was made that a slush fund of $5,000 was maintained by the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America for the purpose of having the censorship law of the state repealed.

"As to the truth of the statement contained in your editorial," wrote Mr. Concannon, in an article which Editor White printed in the middle of his front page—"I as secretary of the state branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, am able to show that our treasury contains the munificent sum of $300.

"At the last National convention held July in Chicago, the new treasurer had the books turned over to him and at that time the balance in the treasury was one cent."

Sheehan Explains Radical Change in Fox Program

Increased Productions for New Year Are Due to Causes Which Vitally Affect Exhibitors—One-Change-a-Day Vogue Will Vanish Within a Year—How Fox Selected Comedies

WINFIELD SHEEHAN, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, in announcing the distributing plans of his concern for 1917, made statements in an exclusive interview for the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which, from the exhibitor's standpoint, mean a radical departure from existing methods, if not revolution.

"The first thing to emphasize," said Mr. Sheehan, "is the Fox Company's exact reasons for deciding to produce sixty-eight features instead of fifty-two next year. No one has clearly presented these reasons to the trade as yet, and there is a possibility that exhibitors may have gained an incorrect impression.

"As previously announced, we are going to produce sixteen more features this year than last, and they will be super-features, starring Theda Bara and William Farnum. There are three reasons for the increased production. The first is that after examining the productions of every concern during the past year we have come to the conclusion that it is a physical impossibility for a manufacturer to bring out fifty-two features all of which are perfect.

"It may surprise you to know that the Fox Company destroyed two finished negatives last year, because they were not up to our standard. The second reason is that we believe that the popularity of the daily program change is waning.

Greater Selection

"Concerning the first reason: let us suppose that you are an exhibitor with patronage sufficient to justify a weekly program change. All of our exhibitors, no matter how often they change programs, pay for the sixty-eight features whether they use them all or not. If, as I say, you are an exhibitor with a weekly program change, you have an opportunity to make your selection from sixty-eight subjects instead of fifty-two. That insures you against running a picture which you do not think your audience would like.

"Now for the second reason. If your house changes program daily, our contention is that when you show one of the super-features it is a strong enough attraction to justify your running it two days in succession. There is no doubt of your ability to fill the house two successive days with a Bara or Farnum picture. By doing that, you bring down your rental cost per day to the same rate as that of the regular features. In other words, while we are more than anxious to give our exhibitors what they want, we are firmly convinced that the daily change of program is wrong. We would be glad to correct it at once if we could; but we cannot accomplish it single-handed. I believe that the daily change will be out of existence before the new year is over.

"In England exhibitors are more than successful with the twice-weekly change. I have studied their conditions, and I have visited every town of any importance in the United Kingdom. I am confident that, in that respect, they are on the right track.

Protection Against Specials

"Many of our exhibitors are already using the two-day change policy, and some the three-day. Those exhibitors, in booking the super-features, we have persuaded to lengthen their showings to four days and a week, respectively.

"The third reason for increasing our next year's production to include sixteen super-features is, in a measure self-protection. Many manufacturers are selling specials at exhorbitant prices because prominent stars appear in them. It has been brought to our attention by our exchanges time after time that our exhibitors often paid four and five times as much for the specials as they paid for our regular program. All of these exhibitors admitted that they lost money on the special but that, with our program, they could make up the deficit.

"Is that fair to us? I don't think it is, and I don't think that anyone with common business sense will think it is. And because our exhibitors do want specials, we are prepared to give them specials which will equal in costliness of presentation and preparation any that are on the market today.

"It may interest your readers to know that all of the exhibitors using our program signed the new contracts away back in September and October."

Mr. Sheehan said that fifteen of the new Foxfilm two-reel comedies are already made. A year has been spent in the various Fox studios experimenting with comedies of all sorts, in order to secure a comedy-type which would please Fox audiences not only in America but in Europe, Australia, South America, and even in Africa, India, China, the Philippines and the small but profitable South Sea Island circuit.

MR. SHEEHAN TELLS WHY SIXTEEN FEATURES WERE ADDED TO THE 1917 FOX PROGRAM:

1. Greater selection: It is physically impossible for any manufacturer to produce a perfect picture each week in the year.
2. A blow at the ruinous one-a-day change: Fox one-day houses will show specials for two days. This will establish a helpful precedent.
3. Protection: Specials made by other companies were causing our exhibitors to lose money.

Foreign Market Normal

President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation has returned to Chicago after a week spent at his New York offices, in the course of which he closed contracts for the distribution of various Mutual film products in Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Russia.

"The foreign film market has now reached a complete readjustment in the neutral zones and out of range of the war," remarked Mr. Freuler.

Marie Dressler Forms Her Own Company

Stage Comedienne Is Star of $2,000,000 Concern, Organized for Release Through Mutual

MARIE DRESSLER, famed star of stage comedy, is forming a two million dollar corporation for the production of a series of pictures for distribution through the Mutual Film Corporation.

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation has confirmed rumors of the deal, following a series of negotiations opened at the Mutual's New York offices and closed at the Chicago executive offices between Mr. Freuler and J. H. Dalton, husband of Miss Dressler.

"Contracts have been drawn," said Mr. Freuler, "and the formation of the corporation is under way. The organization of the corporation for the production of the pictures is in the hands of Mr. Dalton, Crawford Livingston and Mr. Freuler. The organization plans call for a capitalization of two millions, this to give ample capital for the decidedly pretentious scale on which the Dressler studios will make these pictures for Mutual distribution."

It is understood that the first work of the Marie Dressler Motion Picture Corporation, the official name of the new concern, will be the production of twelve two-reel feature pictures based upon and under the title of "Tillie's Nightmare," the highly successful Marie Dressler hit in which she achieved, perhaps, her greatest success on the speaking stage.

Mr. Selig Sends New Year's Message to Trade

Emphasizes Importance of Quality Over Quantity—Split Reels Will Be in Vogue Again Soon—Sunday Question Nothing to Worry About

William Selig was first to discover the possibilities of California as a motion picture producing center. Believing that the perpetual sunshine and diversified scenery of the Golden State were ideal for picture purposes, Mr. Selig sent from Chicago to Los Angeles, the first motion picture plays and producers.

In announcing his intentions for the new year, he speaks enthusiastically.

"I think the new year will be one of the most important for the motion picture," he said. "Despite the efforts of those who seek to tear down anything that is entertaining I look for increased power and prosperity in the film industry. The manufacturers are coming to understand that it is quality and not quantity that is essential to success and they are acting logically on this understanding.

"There is a distinct revival of the demand for meritorious dramas and comedies of one, two and three reels. I would not be surprised to see the split-reel come into favor once more. The demand for good subjects of shorter length will become more pronounced, I think. There is also a cry for novelty—something out of the beaten pathway, and those who can supply the novel and unusual productions in 1917 will profit thereby.

"During the past year the Selig Company learned by active practice that the public was partial to feature films of seven reels or more. As an example I would cite the successful presentation of our productions "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Crisis," and "The Garden of Allah." Of course, this latter production is just being started.

"The arguments pro and con regarding Sunday motion pictures is to my mind useless. There can be but one decision. The motion picture has accomplished more in the support of Sabbath observance than any other one thing. The community motion picture theatre on Sunday offers for ten cents a two hour's entertainment, clean and with a moral lesson. Saloon keepers and pool-room proprietors will inform you that the motion picture is their greatest enemy. It is better for Young America to sit in a motion picture theatre Sunday afternoon or evening than to pursue some doubtful entertainment that is sure to appear if Sunday motion pictures are placed under the ban.

"As previously stated I think the new year will be the most auspicious ever known in the industry. The wheat is being sifted from the chaff, the business is being conducted without the elements of chance and the survival of the fittest can mean but one thing—motion pictures of quality."

Pathe Plans Five Reelers to Equal Serials

J. A. Berst Announces 1917 Plans After Making Thorough Study of the Demand in Various Parts of the Country—Many New Stars

J. A. BERST in giving out the first announcement of Pathe's plans for the new year makes the important statement that from his investigations the five reel play should equal as a box office attraction the serial, and that in the future the five-reeler will be emphasized in the Pathe program.

"A careful anaylsis by disinterested experts, based on reports from exhibitors regarding the drawing power of feature programs, has determined us in favor of paying more attention to five reel features," said Mr. Berst to a NEWS representative. "We have decided that our five reel plays must have as nearly as possible the same drawing power as our serials.

"Pathe is known primarily as the house of serials which draw business to theatres where productions lacking cumulative interest are successful. Therefore the statement that it intends to release a feature program which will equal the serials in drawing power, is important.

Several Studios Contribute to Program

Contributing to the program of Gold Rooster features are several studios, notably the Pathe plant in Jersey City and the factory at Bound Brook. Here the Astra pictures are made and supervised by Louis Gasnier. The Balboa studio in California turns its output over to Pathe just as it is camera-ed from beneath the Western sunshine, and the Thanhouser village of New Rochelle is entirely devoted to that program. The Arrow studio in Yonkers makes another contributor of no mean importance.

The Pathe directors are none of them men who have failed in keeping at the top their companies and offerings. George Fitzmaurice, William Parke, Edward Jose, Donald Mackenzie, George Marion, Frederick Sullivan, Eugene Moore, Henry King, Sherwood McDonald, Ernest Warde and Herbert Blache, have done much for the picture, besides having vast experience on the stage.

In the selection of plots for picturization Pathe draws upon the mental treasures of the late Richard Harding Davis, Paul Armstrong, Winchell Smith, William J. Locke, Henry C. Rowland, George Barr McCutcheon, Henry Kitche Webster, Samuel Merwin, Clyde Fitch, Rudyard Kipling, Rupert Hughes, George Scarborough and Owen Davis.

In putting their works into shape for production and the preparation of original scenarios also, George B. Seitz, Lloyd Lonergan, Philip Lonergan, Agnes C. Johnston, Bertram Millhauser, Will M. Ritchey and Calder Johnston show their expertness only under the Pathe banner.

Ed Mock, of Motography, Dead

Word was received in New York late Monday afternoon of the death at his home in Chicago of Ed. J. Mock, for many years managing editor of Motography and a pioneer in the film field. Funeral services will be held Wednesday.

Resnick Makes Sudden Rise

When the story of quick rises in the film business is reviewed a bright spot in the annals will be the career of Michael Resnick, sales manager of the Dispatch Film Company, New York. Starting in the shipping room with A. & H. M. Warner several years ago, Resnick illustrates well the business veteran's advice to the youngsters which is to make good affiliation and stick to it.

Resnick is the mucilaginous article when it comes to sticking to it for in his association with the Warners he was able to go through every vicissitude of film manoeuvre. When one of the Warner Brothers went to Baltimore about two years ago to open a new office, Resnick volunteered so insistently that he was allowed to go purely by virtue of his earnestness; while it was felt that his going was a premature step in his training it was hoped that his exuberance would cover his lack of experience. It did.

He not only made good but came back to New York and made a record with the New Film Company. More recently when the Dispatch Film Exchange was organized to handle big productions, Resnick was headed for a trial. On his plea that he could do big things with "Purity" it was secured for him and what he did with this is now history. One of his later feats was putting over a deal with Marcus Loew by which he booked the entire series of Ella Wheeler Wilcox poems at an excellent figure for both sides.

If you tell Resnick his progress is due to the fact that he is selling quality goods he will tell some stories that prove that you can not sell a dollar for a nickel in the film business unless you possess that subtle something known as salesmanship. The Dispatch Film Company has now purchased "The Crisis" for New York State, and the swiftly rising Resnick is due for another excursion into higher altitudes.

Novelty Clock for Advertising "The Witching Hour"

In addition to unusual drawings in the lithographs and other advertising matter, the Frohman Amusement Corporation has gotten up, as an advertising novelty to be issued with "The Witching Hour," a novelty stand, the dial of a clock, which measures four feet in diameter and stands five feet six inches high. In place of the numerals on the dial, there appears the letters of the words, "Witching Hour." The hands of the clock are movable so as to show the hour of the next performance.

Further assistance to the State right buyer, as well as the exhibitor, is a replica in a one sheet, 25 inches by 35 of the various trade reviews, comments and articles in the New York daily newspapers. The idea of this sheet was that states right buyers should, by mailing them to the various theatres, place before the exhibitor at one glance, the wonderful criticicisms and comments of the daily papers on this production, and the exhibitor, in his turn, could post this sheet in the lobby of his house for the view of his patrons.

The herald is one of the most startling examples of the printers' art.

"The Film Industry Cannot Succeed Without Co-operation"

An Interesting Interview with Walter W. Irwin, General Manager, Vitagraph, V-L-S-E., in Which the Imperative Necessity of Team Work Is Emphasized

THE exhibitor who sells to the public knows best the character and kind of product for which there is the greatest consumer demand. Next to the exhibitor in the possession of this special knowledge comes the distributor. The producer cannot know the pulse of the public unless he possesses direct channels for information through the exhibitor and distributor.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager, Vitagraph V-L-S-E., stated in a recent interview that the degree of co-operation between producer, distributor and exhibitor is probably today the most important factor in maintaining and furthering the prestige of the industry with the public; for the development of the industry must be fully apace with the expectations and anticipations of the people.

"In other words," said Mr. Irwin, "the future of the industry depends entirely upon co-operation within its ranks.

"No other industry has so advanced in leaps and bounds to prosperity, and at the same time been so utterly devoid to knowledge of itself or acquaintance with its personnel and of influence in its own behalf.

"Until recently, exhibitors, producers, and distributors have not known one another and have not seemed to want to know one another. Also, until recently, a barrier has existed between the various branches of the industry, particularly between the two great branches, the producers and exchangemen on the one part, and the exhibitors on the other, by which instead of doing business with mutual confidence and co-operation, most transactions were conducted with commercial enmity and consequently at an economic sacrifice, and the industry has been torn by jealousy, suspicion and misunderstandings.

"These conditions are slowly righting themselves, but with the graphic examples before us at the present time, of the truth of the historic expression, 'In Union there is strength' and the correction ought to be rapid.

"For instance, every one recognizes that Germany has attained and retained its present position in the European war only because of the high degree of social and economic efficiency existing prior to the war. Likewise, everyone recognizes that England, France, Italy and the other eleven nations engaged in the terrible conflagation are now developing a similar social and economic efficiency. And unless the people of this country to a very great extent drop their independent efforts and come into actual co-operation, socially and commercially, we are likely to find at the end of the war that we are totally unable to cope with the methods of European countries in the contest for the world's commerce.

"During the war this country has virtually become the center of the world's motion picture business, but we will only retain it and thus further our own interests at home by co-operation in producing the world's best product and in developing the marketing of the product upon principles commercially sound and therefore mutually advantageous.

"It was because of the recognition by Greater Vitagraph that the picture in motion has long ceased to be a novelty; that, on the contrary, it is today the chief means of entertainment and education among millions; that Greater Vitagraph decided to have its own distributing department, and thus purchased the V-L-S-E.

"V-L-S-E is simply the sales department of Greater Vitagraph. The sales department is in constant contact with the exhibitors and through them knows the desires and expectations of the public. Thus the producing part of Vitagraph is influenced and benefited by the knowledge of its sales force.

"Within the last few months three features have been discarded, pictures that were good as to story, cast and direction, but which were not quite in step with the advancing demands of the public.

"Neither Vitagraph nor any other producer can make a constant 100 per cent. product. But by its system of co-operation with V-L-S-E, and thus with the exhibitor, Vitagraph can keep from releasing any picture which falls far short of 100 per cent.

"No producer who has worked on a picture for weeks can view it from the exhibitors' or salesman's standpoint.

"It is so much easier to criticise than produce, and it is criticism after production which makes for perfection."

Farrar's "Joan" to be Seen in Metropolis Xmas

Lasky's Director-General Will Make Cohan's "Broadway Jones" Just to Keep in Practice While in the East

CECIL B. DE MILLE'S ten-part photoplay based on the life of Joan of Arc, and entitled "Joan the Woman," with Miss Geraldine Farrar as the star, will be shown publicly for the first time on Christmas Day in the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York. The presentation will be made by Jesse L. Lasky, and the engagement will continue indefinitely at the big metropolitan theatre.

The photoplay was written by Miss Jeanie MacPherson. It took more than four months in the making. Miss Farrar was at the Lasky studios in California all last summer appearing in the part of the Maid of Orleans. No figures have been given as to the cost of the spectacle, although an intimation of the lavishness of the production is contained in the list of the cast, among whom, in addition to Miss Farrar, are: Wallace Ried, Hobart Bosworth, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Charles Clary, Cleo Ridgely, Marjorie Daw, James Neill, Horace B. Carpenter, Tully Marshall and others. Alvin Wyckoff was the photographer. Mr. De Mille has devoted himself to this production for more than the past half year.

Leaving Los Angeles a short time ago, Mr. De Mille stopped in Chicago long enough to show the completed picture to Miss Farrar, who is in that city appearing with the Chicago Opera Company.

Since he was last in the East, Mr. De Mille has been made president of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, one of the subsidiaries of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Joan in Prison — Lighting the Faggots — Joan Nurses the Wounded Englishman

Cecil B. De Mille's Great Production "Joan the Woman" (Joan of Arc) with Geraldine Farrar

Trend of Trade Shown by Rothapfel Move

Open Booking Policy, Inaugurated at Rialto with a "V" Film, Is Considered Significant of Changing Conditions

LEAST of all managers who are accused of poor taste, judgment, or inconsistency, has Samuel L. Rothapfel proven guilty. Since taking charge of the Rialto "Temple of the Motion Picture," Mr. Rothapfel has used the Triangle output continuously and persistently. Now, however, it is announced that Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features will form the basis of the future program. "The Girl Philippa" will inaugurate the new policy when it starts for a week's run at the Rialto on December 31.

This production is based on the serial story of the same name by Robert W. Chambers, which ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. The Vitagraph pictured version was directed by S. Rankin Drew, under the supervision of Albert E. Smith, and features Anita Stewart. It will be presented by Mr. Rothapfel in eight reels, although many consider the story well worthy of a twelve-reel production.

The change of policy at the Rialto startles many who are ignorant of motion picture trade conditions. Admittedly the finest photoplay theatre in the country, its manager has always striven to give patrons the very best in screen entertainment. On signing the new contract, December 5, with Walter W. Irwin of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E, Mr. Rothapfel said he had scoured the market before coming to a decision and making the selection now announced.

Another innovation has been decided upon which will cause the doors of the Rialto to open at 10 A. M., commencing December 31, instead of at noon.

The new plans were decided upon immediately after the close of a week's run at the Rialto of E. H. Sothern in "An Enemy to the King," which has been commented upon as marking the return of the costume play to screenland.

Among the 1917 Blue Ribbon releases, which will probably follow in sequence, the first mentioned Vitagraph, are "The Man of Mystery," with E. H. Sothern; "The Glory of Yolande," featuring Anita Stewart; "Blind Justice" and "Her Right to Live," in which Peggy Hyland and Antonio Moreno have the leading parts.

Mr. Irwin, commenting on the new Vitagraph-Rialto agreement, said:

"It was a pleasure to have Mr. Rothapfel go over the stories and casts of Vitagraph plays for the coming year. That he has selected them as the basis of his 1917 feature entertainment after comparing them with the entire motion picture product, confirms our own estimate of the value of our program to exhibitors."

Mr. Rothapfel said:

"The Vitagraph contract speaks for itself. I can add nothing except that I shall make every effort to stage and project these pictures in a manner which their magnitude and worth requires."

Week-in-Advance Payment is Enough

Linton, Exhibitor in Central New York, Says That Theatre Men Will Be Satisfied with This Arrangement

F. H. ELLIOTT, Executive Secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, to-day makes public a letter he received from one of New York State's organized exhibitors.

It relates to the much mooted question of trust between the exchangeman and the theatre owner as relating to and proven non-existant by the agitation for and against advance deposits upon service. The writer claims to speak especially for the exhibitors of Central New York, and says in part:

"When the National Association was formed, it was understood by some of the League delegates like myself who listened to the arguments as to why we should become allied with the other branches of the industry, that the directors of the association would have the power and will to correct injuries done by one branch of the trade toward another—providing, of course, that the weaker brother was also a member of the National Association.

"With this understanding, I brought before one of your directors who was present at a meeting of the Central New York Locals, a few days ago, my wish to learn why your board did not correct the injustice some of the exchanges and all the feature companies are doing the legitimate exhibitors today by demanding an advance deposit which is to remain with the company as long as the exhibitor continues to run the service. This director replied that the Board of Directors of the National Association has no such power.

"Will your association state through the trade papers, for the information of the exhibitors whether it has such power or not, and if so, why it should not correct this injustice. At present the exhibitor has to pay advance for each picture, the express both ways, and for all the advertising.

"The majority of exhibitors are perfectly willing to pay a week in advance and this is guarantee enough for any good producer. If his program is good, he knows the exhibitor is only too anxious to keep it.

"Any method proposed by producers or exchanges whereby the League or any body of exhibitors should guarantee the account of any individual exhibitor would meet with instant rejection. Why should it not? We won't want an exhibitor to have credit unless he is worthy of it, and let the exchanges decide on that point.

"We exhibitors have financed a good many producers by our advance deposits and we are certainly not going to finance any competing exhibitor. Nothing else but the elimination of the advance deposit and the return of the deposit already up, with an agreement that all exhibitors shall pay a week in advance for their showings, will satisfy us today."

The above is signed by W. H. Linton, Central N. Y. Local 10, Utica, New York.

Jacksonville Folk Are Busy

Jacksonville, Fla., December.

The Victor Moore Company of Klever Komedies Players have purchased a large studio site in Jacksonville, and work on the erection of a stage 81 feet long by 56 feet wide was commenced this week. The stage of the company adjoins that of the Thanhouser studio on Ninth street, and is one of the most ideal locations in the city.

Kate Price, star of the Billy Ruge-Kate Price, Amber Star comedies, is constantly in demand at social functions in Jacksonville, and is always the centre of attraction when anything is going on. While attending a recent bazaar of the St. Mary's Guild in this city, Miss Price aided materially those in charge of the bazaar, and in appreciation of her services was the recipient of a handsome bunch of poinsettias, the Florida flower.

Babe Hardy, the Vim star comedian, is now directing his own company, and is producing some of the best pictures produced at the Vim, Jacksonville studios since their organization. Mr. Hardy is supported by Miss Ethel Burton, Miss Florence McLaughlin, Tom Murray, Louise Carver, Joe Cohan and Bert Tracy. Herman O'Brock is the chief cinematrographer for the Babe Hardy Company, having recently joined the Vim from New York.

The Billy Ruge Company, of Amber Star Players, will use the new stage at the Garrick studios for the production of their comedies in the future. Billy is being directed by Bill Louis, and the pictures are meeting with a great demand.

The Juvenile Feature Films Company, of which G. Alfred Walker is business manager, have leased a large tract of land for the purpose of erecting a studio for the production of juvenile films. Mr. Walker has secured a number of well-known juvenile players, and expect to start production as soon as the stage is completed.

The Regal Photoplayers of Cleveland, Ohio, have secured stage space at the Garrick studios and are producing a five-reel dramatic picture, entitled "What Becomes of the Children." Walter Shumway is star of the picture, and is supported by Morgan Jones, Billy Sullivan, and Miss Corra Beach, who is also the author of the picture.

Yorke Company Working Hard

Oscar Apfel is preparing a story for the Yorke Company. Mr. Apfel will direct Harold Lockwood and May Allison alternately with Fred Balshofer and Jay Hunt, and the latter will prepare their story, while Apfel directs his. With such a splendid arrangement some fine features may confidently be looked for, and the details will surely be carefully looked after.

Exhibitors and F. I. L. M. Clubs Cross Swords

New York League Appoints Committee to Inquire of Manufacturers Their Stand on Question of Collections—Hoy Makes Denial

THE first official protest against the activities of the F. I. L. M. Club in collecting debts through the Hoy Reporting Service was made last Wednesday afternoon at a meeting of New York Local No. 1.

Statements were made that the F. I. L. M. Club, through the Hoy Reporting Service, was endeavoring to collect bills against exhibitors by unfair pressure, and that in many instances the claims brought by the exchanges were unjust.

Members of the New York Local, stated that the F. I. L. M. Club is composed of various exchange managers, and while its purposes are ostensibly social, in reality it is a business organization, one of the aims of which is to bring exhibitors to its arbitrary terms.

Lou Blumenthal presided at the meeting, and the questions were hotly discussed by Charles Steiner, Sidney Ascher, Mr. Rosenthal, Sam Trigger and other members.

A committee of five was appointed to inquire of the various manufacturers their exact stand upon the question of collections, and to endeavor to find a way to relieve the oppression.

Rentals for Unused Films

Members present declared that in some cases the collections demanded by the Hoy Reporting Service included rental for days when the films in their possession were not used. These films, they said, were not picked up by the exchange carriers.

Brooklyn Local members who were present announced that they had passed a resolution to place the matter before the District Attorney. A similar motion was made by New York Local members, but it was set aside, pending further investigation.

What New York Local No. 1 intends doing is to establish the reliability of its various members. They claimed that it is unjust to press exhibitors with bills which they do not owe, and that the exhibitor should be given an opportunity to state whether or not the bills against him really are just.

Charles B. Hoy, president of the Hoy Reporting Service, has made a statement to the NEWS in reply to the New York Local's charge of unfairness.

"Nothing would please me more," said Mr. Hoy, "than learning that the exhibitors had taken their case to the District Attorney. The first thing they would discover would be that the F. I. L. M. Club and the Hoy Reporting Service are not only acting entirely within their legal rights, but that they are giving the exhibitor the squarest of deals.

Charges Unfounded, Says Hoy

"The New York Local's charge that we are unfair and unjust is without foundation. Let me read you an extract from a letter which was sent to two thousand exhibitors in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut on November 1:

"Dear Sir:

"Any difference or disagreement that you may have in the future with the film exchange you are doing business with will be handled through this office. You will hear more fully regarding this matter in the near future. If you have any complaint of serious damage against any particular exchange to adjust, we will take up same for you without charge. You may call at our office to see Mr. Hoy and the matter will be taken up and adjusted by us in a fair and impartial manner.

"We render this service under the direct orders of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City and any of our adjustments will have their co-operation and backing."

"It is absolutely untrue that we attempt to force exhibitors to pay money they do not owe. When an exchange manager who is a member of the F. I. L. M. Club brings to my attention an exhibitor who is behind in his accounts, or who has paid a bill with a worthless check, or who is accused of switching or sub-renting reels, our first act is to get in touch with the exhibitor and hear his side of the case. Very shortly we will put into effect this form letter to exhibitors who are behind in their accounts:

"'Dear Sir:

"The ..... Film Exchange advise that you owe them $..... long past due.

"If their account is correct, please remit to them promptly; if not correct, please advise this office.

"Unless settlement is made by the ..... inst., will advise our clients to take such steps as circumstances may warrant in order to protect their interests.

"This is our last notification, and unless we hear from you, will take it that account is correct and proceed accordingly.'

"The F. I. L. M. Club's methods of protecting themselves against dishonest and crafty exhibitors has been so successful in Chicago that it will soon become a national institution. Clubs will soon be organized in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Buffalo and other exchange centers until the entire country is covered. About fifty centers will be necessary.

Experience Square Dealings

"Honest exhibitors who have had experience with us will tell you how square our dealings are. They are anxious to be rated with the Hoy Reporting Service, and the eventual result of this rating system will be the abolishment of the deposit system. Of course, exhibitors who are dishonest will be rated accordingly, and they will have to pay deposits.

"I am now working on a rating book which will correspond with the Bradstreet and Dunn reports. We expect to have every exhibitor in the country rated, and in addition to his business standing there will be such details as the seating capacity of his house, its age, equipment, etc.

"What we are trying to do is simply to separate the sheep from the goats. Consequently, it seems to me that all those who object fall right into the goat class."

H. H. Buxbaum, general manager of the General Film Company's Twenty-third Street Exchange, when acquainted with the outcome of the Wednesday meeting of the New York Local said that if the exhibitors

Lockport's Mayor Awaits Advice on Sunday Closing

Special to Motion Picture News.

Lockport.—Mayor John R. Earl has received from the State Civic League of Albany a communication calling his attention to the recent decision of the appellate division of the Court of Appeals holding that Sunday movies are a violation of the Sunday law.

The mayor will not take action until Corporation Counsel Roy H. Ernest has given an opinion as to whether the court decision applies to cities of the third class.

Mayor Earl states that he has received information that a bill will be introduced in the state legislature next month legalizing Sunday motion picture shows.

Censor Reports Go to Mayor

Although the Springfield, Ill., Board of Censors, a body appointed by the mayor, have no police power, they are to review pictures shown in the playhouses and make reports to the mayor. The ordinance recently brought up in council asking for a board of censors with police powers was sidetracked.

The members of the board, two women and one man, are Dr. C. St. Clair Drake, secretary of the Illinois state board of health, Mrs. Roy Ide and Mrs. Mary Mather. Dr. Drake immediately after his appointment left for Chicago and Cleveland to consult with censors in those places and get information for the board.

Freuler Advocates a Fifteen-Cent Coin

President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation advocates a fifteen-cent coin. He declares that it will be an aid to motion picture theatres.

"The picture business is big enough to commence to ask for some of the things it needs and wants in the way of legislation and legislative accommodation," says Mr. Freuler. "Let some of the people who worry about censorship and plans to make it hard for the picture interests try to think about something constructive for a few minutes."

Only Narrow Minded People Against Sunday Opening

Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, has issued a statement anent Sunday showing of motion pictures, declaring that it is only the narrow minded and out of date prejudices of some few people that cause the Sunday trouble. "The law that prohibits Sunday motion pictures," he says, was framed in a day when to laugh on the Sabbath was a transgression. Fortunately, we have come to believe that it is by the deed and not by the creed that we measure morals."

Other points on which Mr. Abrams dwells in this connection is the educational value of the picture, its recreation value for the classes who cannot afford a more expensive form of entertainment, and the fact that the majority of churches champion Sunday openings.

Mitchel Aids in Fight Against Sunday Closing

Slides of New York Mayor with Protest Against Sunday Law Are Sent Broadcast Over State—Mass Meeting of Exhibitors Next Friday

At a meeting of the New York Local No. 1, held last Wednesday afternoon, a motion was made and carried to form a mass meeting on the night of December 22, at Wurlitzer Hall, at which exhibitors from all over the State would be present to lay plans for defeating the Sunday closing law.

Mayor Mitchel has given permission for the use of his photograph on the second of a series of slides, which will be shown in all New York theatres. The slide will carry printed matter to the effect that the Mayor is strongly opposed to Sunday closing.

The showing of moving pictures in the public parks of the city during the summer was discussed. Some one said, if pictures of general subjects were shown nightly, it would be to the detriment of the regular theatres and airdomes. If only educational pictures were shown, it would not be so hurtful. If only one or two entertainments were given, it would not be objectionable to the regular exhibitors. From the standpoint of public welfare, the exhibitor did not want to be small or narrow, but from a business point of view, it was a matter that demanded consideration. A committee of three was appointed by the chairmen to inquire into the proposition and report to the League at its next meeting to be held Wednesday, December 20.

An announcement sent out from the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, states that slides containing Mayor Mitchel's message were prepared for showing at all New York State theatres on Sunday. It is expected that theatres not provided with stereopticons will present the message by means of leaders inserted in films.

The following slide will also be flashed in all theatres, for the benefit of fans, who, it is hoped, will sign a petition expected to contain five million names, against Sunday closing. The slide is as follows:

> Do you want this theatre closed on Sunday?
> It provides you decent, clean amusement at a price within the reach of every pocketbook.
> Signify your desire by signing the petition at the box office.

Messrs. S. H. Trigger and Charles Steiner, representing New York Local No. 1 of the Exhibitors' League, called at City Hall last week and interviewed Mayor Mitchel and Fire Commissioner Adamson on the Sunday Closing Law.

Both the Mayor and Fire Commissioner expressed themselves as being heartily in favor of an open Sunday so far as the motion picture theatres are concerned. They will attend the mass meeting to be held December 22 at Wurlitzer Hall, as will also License Commissioner Bell, Commissioner Woods and the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst.

Trigger Has Opposition in Run for President

Charles Steiner Also Will Run—Trigger Announces Names of Members of Finance Committee—Steiner's Platform Is Business Efficiency

The election of a new president for New York Local No. 1, as well as president for the State League, takes place at League headquarters on Wednesday, December 20, at 2 p. m. Samuel Trigger and Charles Steiner are candidates. Samuel Trigger, in announcing his candidacy for the office, makes the following statement:

"Mayor McClellan caused a general uprising of the Motion Picture Industry of Greater New York on December 23, 1907. Now, in 1916, our interests are threatened, not by the Mayor, but by a decision from the Appellate Division. Last week every theatre in White Plains WAS CLOSED ON SUNDAY.

"This is getting too close to home to be comfortable. We desire your co-operation in our endeavor to combat this adverse decision. There are other local matters which are detrimental to our interests, and I consider it an opportune moment to take these matters up at this meeting.

"Incidentally, I desire to state that at this meeting we are to have an election of officers. These are troublous times, and a wise decision may mean the retention of your business. I am in the ring for president."

"My sole desire is to improve League conditions in every way possible," said Mr. Trigger. "If there is a better man for the position, he will find me only too willing to help him accomplish the good that must somehow be accomplished.

"The candidates for the Financial Committee are all well-known men. Morris Needles will be treasurer. Other members of the Finance Committee will be Mr. Rhonheimer, Charles Haring and William Hogemeier. Mr. Hogemeier has been in the hospital, and has undergone three operations, but he will be up in time to attend Wednesday's meeting."

Charles Steiner, owner of the New Fourteenth Street theatre and the American Movies, Avenue B and Third street, New York, has announced his candidacy for the presidency of New York Local No. 1 in opposition to Sam H. Trigger.

Mr. Steiner declares for a platform of business efficiency, the chief plank in which is his proposition to do away with the advance deposit business.

There are about one hundred members, said Mr. Steiner, in the New York Local. If each member subscribed $100 a trust fund of about $10.000 could be created to be held as a guarantee to the exchanges on members' service.

Films Regulated Without Censors

San Francisco.

The action of the police department of San Francisco, Cal., in the matter of the local film production, "The Lure of Venus," produced by Lolita Perine, bears out the contention of the great body of film men that there is no need of a board of censorship in this city, or in any other community. In this particular case the film had no sooner been completed than there was trouble over it, some of those interested in it taking the stand that it should not be shown. Later a private showing was given at the Theatre St. Francis, and the production was pronounced immodest by many who saw it, because of its nudity. It was booked for presentation at a local playhouse, but the police stepped in and forbade it being shown, announcing their decision in time to allow the owner of the house to book another production. The exhibitor was expected to file a protest, but he stood by the decision of the police. Since the abolition of the board of censorship a few months ago the showing of several films has been stopped, but in each case the action of the police has met with the approval of film exchange interests in general.

Third Annual Ball in Baltimore Set for January 11

At the last meeting of the Maryland Movie Club the arrangements for the third annual ball of the organization were discussed. The event will be held at Lehmann Hall, North Howard street, Baltimore, on January 11, and there will be a strong effort to make it the biggest and best that has ever been held, as the committee has received various appropriations for decorations and entertainment.

The annual election of officers will follow immediately after the ball. Those in charge of the arrangements are J. W. Hawkins, chairman; L. Roy, assistant; H. J. Renwer, master of ceremonies, and C. B. Murray, assistant.

Universal Help to Gather Joyfully

Preparations are under way for the annual ball and dinner of the Universal employees which will be held at Reisenweber's, Saturday, January 13. Ever since the organization of the Universal it has been the custom to set aside one night a year which is devoted entirely to merriment and where every employee of the company from President Carl Laemmle to the third assistant office boy meet on an equal footing.

Much of the success of the Universal has been due to the unwavering loyalty of the employees and the annual gathering of the entire working force has contributed to the growth of this loyalty. On this occasion there is no distinction between the heads of departments and their workers.

Many surprises are in store for the guests this year, but the officials in charge of the ball are maintaining a strict reticence and refuse to give an inkling of what is planned.

International Denies Being Ousted from Canada

Officials Claim That Statement Made in Alleged New Trade Paper Is Not Only False, but Ridiculous—Report's Origin May Have Been Malicious

THE statement said to have been made in an alleged new trade paper recently to the effect that International films have been barred from Canada is indignantly denied by the International Film Company.

According to International officials, the statement is not only groundless, but it is absolutely absurd. Such a statement, they say, must have been based either on entirely false grounds or else it was published maliciously.

"International films," said one official, "are going splendidly in Canada. The demand is increasing constantly. In fact, we consider Canada one of our very best fields. As for the authorities of Canada being opposed in any way to our films, that notion is ridiculous on its very surface.

"There is nothing in International films which anyone can say is unpatriotic, nor is there anything in our films which can be said to be in any way prejudicial to Canadian interests. I cannot understand how such a foolish statement could have been published.

"As a matter of fact, we are not booking our pictures in Canada, but we are disposing of our Canadian rights outright. Our financial results have convinced us how excellent that plan is."

Grace Darling, who with Harry Fox, shares the stellar honors in the International photoplay series, "Beatrice Fairfax," was given an ovation upon her personal appearance in Canada, where "Beatrice Fairfax," is being released by the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd.

In Toronto, Miss Darling appeared at the Regent theatre, the largest motion picture house in Canada, and also at twenty other theatres in Toronto, in all of which "Beatrice Fairfax" is showing. In Montreal, she appeared at the Imperial, the largest theatre in that city, and later in twenty-two other Montreal houses that are running the popular serial.

During her stay in Montreal, Miss Darling was presented with twenty-six enormous floral tributes from exhibitors, newspapers and theatrical stars who are appearing in that city. All of these flowers she turned over to the management of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel and later they were distributed among wounded Canadian soldiers there.

After her appearance in Toronto, Miss Darling was given a dinner at the St. Charles Hotel by the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd. Forty persons were present and Miss Darling was presented with a solid silver card case by the newspapers of the city.

Conquest Pictures Is New Edison Brand

New Pictures Will Be One, Two and Three Reel Length—Subjects to Be Refreshing—Rumored Possible Release Through Triangle

A NEW plan of producing motion pictures has been originated by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and it soon will be given to exhibitors and the public in the form of weekly grouped programs consisting of approximately five reels of a variety of pictures. Instead of the melodramatic type of productions that depict life from morbid and depressing viewpoints, the new Edison pictures will be clean and refreshing and will mark what their sponsors believe will prove the beginning of a new era of the silent drama.

The dramatic features of the program, for the greater part, will be two and three-reel stories in which youthful characters will appear and in which clean and laudable ambition and desire for achievement will underlie the development of the plots. One and two-reel farce comedies and some unusual scientific subjects and novelties will supplement the other features of the program.

The keynote of the coming Edison pictures may be found in the name that they will bear. They are to be released under the brand of "Conquest Pictures," and in that title is summed up the ideas of those who originated them and the desires of the company that has engaged in the production of them. The dramatic features that will form the major part of the program will be based on tales of conquest and achievement and the series itself is expected to make a rapid conquest of the motion picture world when it is put on the market. For some months plans for the production of Conquest Pictures have been maturing and at the present time a number of the productions are completed.

It is understood that they will be released through one of the largest motion picture combinations now existing. It is understood that this concern is the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

The company will make a series of pictures based upon the more notable stories written for young people. These productions will be adapted from the works of Ralph Henry Barbour, John Bennett, Kirk Munroe, and other authors whose works have virility and literary merit and whose stories are read by young and old with equal pleasure.

While the rights to a large number of the best stories of the most famous writers of tales of adventure have been secured, the dramatic features of the Conquest Pictures program by no means will be confined to the production of these. A number of well known writers have been commissioned to prepare original stories for the program, and some exceptionally meritorious work is being done by them. The field that Conquest Pictures has entered is so extensive that there will be no difficulty in securing a great diversity of stories.

The comedy productions will be one and two reels in length and will be designed to dovetail with the two and three-reel dramatic productions. Each weekly program will be composed of a dramatic feature, a comedy, and approximately one thousand feet of split-reel subjects. The latter will consist of educational and scientific subjects.

WITH THE EXHIBITOR

Mexican Bandit Would Hesitate to Ask Such Terms, Says Exhibitor

Owner of Theatres Rated in Several Figures Objects to "Sandbag Proposition" Put Up to Him by Well-Known State Rights Producer

WE are recently in receipt of a letter from a Western exhibitor operating a circuit of small town theatres, which we know to be from the heart. In a postscript he explains that the pictures are sold through a local distributor, with whom previous relations have been pleasant, and he, therefore, feels sure the imposition complained of by him as making "demands that a Mexican bandit would hesitate to impose" is a home office requirement. Here is the letter:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, INC.,
729 SEVENTH AVE.,
NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:

Will you kindly give space to the accompanying protest, which we hope will bear fruit in a fight that must sooner or later be waged by the provincial exhibitor against the picture promoter who seeks to borrow capital for his business under the guise of deposits.

The practice has gone to such an extent that some recognition of it must be taken by the exhibitor or he will have a good-sized bank roll tied up in the hands of film makers, who, to avoid borrowing money to do business on, are demanding a so-called deposit.

We operate a string of seven picture theatres in the State of Arizona. We have been in business here three years. Do not owe a dime to any film exchange in America. Have never let a film bill run one week. Have a rating at the bank that would make many a producing firm rest easy over night, and yet, a concern marketing a product on the Coast, which is soon to be released for projection, writes us as follows:

"The price for your city is $300.00 for which you can obtain a three or four-day run. The contract calls for an advance deposit of two pictures. AND THEN EACH PRODUCTION C. O. D. You are protected on this contract against loss."

"Immediately after running (name of picture), if you lose money your deposit of $600.00 is refunded and whatever loss you have sustained is returned to you from the $300.00 paid for the (name of picture), but this cancels your contract and we are then at liberty to deal with your competitors."

Not content with asking a deposit on pictures that have never as yet been reviewed, made by a new firm just entering the field, they not only make a demand for a deposit that would stagger the small exhibitor, but they advise that you will be shipped C. O. D., after they have your deposit.

They write us that in view of the fact that we are the big users of film in the State they are giving us the first chance and end by threatening to at once sell the product to our competitor, if we do not kick in.

The Post Office regulations prevent a reply in keeping with the insult to the intelligence of the exhibitor in this sandbag proposition. As a champion of the very heart of this great industry (the small exhibitor), we ask that you aid us by turning the light on this so-called deposit scheme which is nothing more than a plan to promote money to operate a business.

The time is coming when the exhibitor is going to be recognized as a business man. He is going to be rated and served like any other business. He is not going to be asked to pay in advance for something he has never seen. He is not going to be compelled to stuff the failure of some film concern down the necks of his patrons, because he is tied up with a deposit that prevents him from demanding the same justice that would be accorded to any other business concern in the country.

The time is coming when the film exhibitor is going to be recognized as much an integral part of the community as the bank, or the grocery store, or any other occupation or business, where it requires brains and ability to lead it to a successful issue.

There was a time when the exhibitor picked ducks, massaged windows, or wrote an uneven hand with a pitch fork in the day time and opened his "opery" at night. but that has gone. The picture exhibitor is rapidly being recognized as a business man who is to be treated as such and not to be shuttled into a class of undesirables. The film maker who demands such a contract from a business concern with a larger and better rating than the film maker is a menace to the game, not an aid. No matter how big his picture product, he has no right to sandbag a firm into a contract of that kind, because he has perhaps a star whom the public may want to see.

Respectfully,
PHOENIX AMUSEMENT CO.,
By Jo. E. RICKARDS.

This exhibitor speaks with authority. Whether or not he had more money in

Mr. Exhibitor: This is your department. You are cordially invited and urged to use it. Your letters will be intelligently presented and your questions will be carefully answered by a member of our editorial staff who is an exhibitor of long experience.

We are here every week to serve you.

Francis Bushman Rescuing Beverly Bayne in the First Episode of the Metro Serial, "The Great Secret" bank than the amount of the deposit for the picture, makes no difference in the discussion. The exhibitor who has paid his film bills promptly, and whose credit is good, cannot be presumed because of this fact to be holding a surplus of several hundred; in fact, if he owns more than one theatre, several thousands of dollars for forced loan to film producers. That any film producer should have such a marketable product that he can demand such terms, is the result of an unhealthy competition, where the "goods" are so peculiarly individual that within certain limits the buyer is willing to waive all rights and do as dictated to.

The deposit system has been the subject of several bitterly assailing letters that have appeared in these columns. There are two sides to the question. The man who makes heavy contracts with stars and invests large sums for production, has it within his power to at least once rob the exhibitor more, by cheapening his product, than he ever could through misuse of deposited funds, unless the deposits were wilfully misapplied. The deposits in his hands, if he is honest and foresighted, are a guarantee to him of success provided his enterprise is legitimate, and is maintained on the plane the depositors expect from his promises. So far there has been no direct misuse of deposits, and the money so deposited has enabled production on a larger scale than the capital of some of the producers would have warranted without this guarantee of a sure market for the product. But the same rule which in the case of other merchandise requires payment after delivery, when reputable merchants are dealing with one another, must eventually apply in the film business, and we understand Mr. Lewis J. Selznick offers to meet any committee of bona fide exhibitors with clean and honorable business records, and who properly represent the highest intelligence of the industry, and will propose to them a plan which shall be fair to all and eliminate future deposits where the producer can be assured of the carrying out of the contract entered into between his company and the exhibitor. Mr. Selznick believes he has a practical way to do this, and wants to be the first to assist in abolishing the practice complained of in the above letter. He suggested this at an exhibitors' meeting some weeks ago, and on another page of this issue of the NEWS will be found an interview with Mr. Selznick, which was prompted by the plainness with which the writer of the above states the argument for abolishment of this evil.

Tin-Pan Piano Disappearing

First class theatres in the Middle West are fast doing away with the old tin-pan type of electric piano, substituting for it the organ operated by a trained artist, or an orchestra. Even a single pianist is better than the electric piano, they believe, and a pianist, with a violin player for the regular programs, and an orchestra for the features, is a common arrangement. Since a few of the larger pictures, with their own orchestras, have made such a hit, the exhibitors have realized the value of music and are advertising that feature alongside the pictures. GUY LEAVITT.

Competition Sometimes Helps

Exhibitors of Omaha, Neb., are realizing a new factor in their experience. When the Sun theatre opened at Fifteenth and Farnam streets, other downtown houses began to figure just how much patronage they would lose. Even surburban houses began to calculate their loss. On the opening day, when the Sun had two solid pages of advertising matter in the big city dailies, the other theatres began an advertising war

The Sun on Thanksgiving Day—the opening day—enjoyed a business even bigger than was expected. But other downtown theatre managers did not have to sit back and watch the opening of the new house, for they, too, were rushed with the biggest crowds in the city's history The Muse, playing "Miss George Washington," broke all records since its opening

The Strand, showing "A Corner in Colleens," broke its records, while Manager La Marquard, of the Empress, made exactly $118 more than on any other day in his house's history The Empress is only a little over a block from the Sun.

Since Thanksgiving—which was the biggest motion picture day Omaha ever enjoyed—the pace has been maintained.

New Mall Theatre Cleveland's First Duplex

All eyes in Cleveland are watching the success of the New Mall theatre, Cleveland's first and so far only "duplex" house. The "duplex" feature will not be completely in operation until the first of the year, the Euclid avenue auditorium not being finished yet, but the public will first be acquainted with the already completed section, opening from Superior avenue.

Manager Louis H. Becht is one of the pioneers in the business. He instituted many innovations at the old Mall, and intends to give midnight shows on Saturday nights for those employed during night hours, and has already adopted as a slogan the catchy phrase, A Theatre for All the New Mall. His opening invitation was to invite everybody to look over the house, enjoy a program of short subjects, and some special musical numbers with vocal solos and organ recital, keeping open house until midnight.

The officers of the new theatre, besides Managing Director Becht, who is also president, are Fred Desberg, vice-president; Joseph Laronge, treasurer, and E. P. Strong, secretary.

Exhibitors' Personals—From Here and There

CALIFORNIA.—San Diego: W. H. Hilts, manager of the Alhambra theatre, has taken over the management of the Illusion theatre also, conducting both as motion picture houses. Between times Manager Hilts appears in minor parts with the Pollard Picture Plays Company at the Exposition.

INDIANA.—Indianapolis: J. B. Elliott, president of the Colonial Amusement Company, who controls theatres at Paris and Richmond, Ky., as well as the Colonial at Lexington, has been made general manager of the Strand theatre, Lexington, pending the final transfer of the stock of M. Switow, president and general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, to the Colonial Amusement Company. The stock of Mr. Switow, however, does not give the Colonial interests control of the stock of the Strand. Slaughter Sparks, the present manager, will remain in active charge.

KENTUCKY.—Edgewood: The Edgewood theatre, Edgewood, Ky., which has been closed for some time, reopened recently.

Glasgow: The Trigg theatre, Glasgow, Ky., has installed a new $2,000 piano, made by the Wurlitzer Company. It is the latest thing in the way of automatic self-players. Manager Aspley has announced that he contemplates making several improvements in the house.

Fairmont: David Heilman, formerly of Mt. Sterling, Ky., has leased the Hippodrome theatre at Fairmount, W. Va., and will manage the house personally.

Stamping Ground: The Stamping Ground theatre at Stamping Ground, Ky., was totally destroyed by fire on the night of Dec. 2, along with several buildings adjoining. The loss is estimated at $75,000. The fire started in the theatre when a film became ignited by a deflected spark. The house was full at the time, but the spectators escaped without mishap. William Adams, the operator, was severely burned while attempting to put out the fire.

LOUISIANA.—Lake Charles: The Southern Amusement Company has subleased the Iris theatre to Will Scaife, who will alter and operate a barber shop there. The company will continue to operate the Arcade and Princess theatres, in addition to the new Imperial theatre, soon to be built by them.

MICHIGAN.—Jackson: The Majestic theatre, Jackson, Mich., of which W. S. McLaren is manager, announces a policy of seven-day open booking, having discarded program booking completely.

NEBRASKA.—Fairbury: C. W. Bartlett gave the proceeds of his house on December 14 to the charities of the city. The pictures were furnished him free by the General exchange at Omaha.

Omaha: J. W. Jackson has put a new minusa screen in his house, the Star, Omaha. L. M. Garman was in Omaha Wednesday. He owns the Strand at Lincoln, Neb., and now has taken over the Oliver, which formerly was a "legitimate" theatre. He will show big state rights features during the winter. Business is fine, he said. G. E. Eselin this week opened the Loyal theatre, Twenty-fourth and Caldwell, Omaha, which has been closed. He is showing a straight program four days every week, and features and serials the other three days.

NEW JERSEY.—Boonton: The Boonton Opera House, the oldest theatre in this city, was sold this week by a stock company to Nathaniel Booth. Mr. Booth, a Boonton resident, announces that he will subject the opera house to a complete system of remodeling, renovation and improvement. It is planned to reopen the theatre the early part of the coming year with late releases of big features and popular picture plays.

Newark: Frank G. Hall and his associates, Arthur M. Werner and Harry T. Hall, have purchased the controlling interest in the Strand theatre in Market street. The new owners will take possession next Monday. Mr. Hall, although one of the youngest men in the New Jersey picture field, is a veteran in point of experience, and has been identified with numerous successful enterprises, chief among which is the chain of United States picture houses operating in Newark, Elizabeth, Plainfield, Jersey City, East Orange, Hoboken, Passaic and Union Hill. Together with Mr. Werner, Mr. Hall has the New Jersey state rights for "Civilization" and "War's Women," another big Ince production. The Strand theatre, Mr. Hall's latest acquisition, is one of the largest and most modernly equipped picture houses in Newark.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Harrisburg: Richard Kilgore, known throughout the city as the former energetic house manager of the Colonial Motion Picture theatre, owned by the Wilmer, Vincent & Appeal interests, at Third and Market streets, was killed December 1, when he was crushed between two cars in the yards of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Mr. Kilgore resigned his position at the theatre about eight months ago and took up railroading, and it was while he was employed in the latter work that he met his death. He was the organizer and conductor of "Kilgore's Kolonial Kids" band, an excellent musical organization composed entirely of boys, whose playing was used extensively in advertising the Colonial theatre. Plans were made for Mr. Kilgore's burial in Chicago, where he formerly lived. Announcement has just been made that H. E. Booth of this city has leased the Orpheum theatre, Front street, Steelton, from Peter Settino, who had operated the house for the last four years. Mr. Booth was formerly piano player for the Colonial theatre, this city.

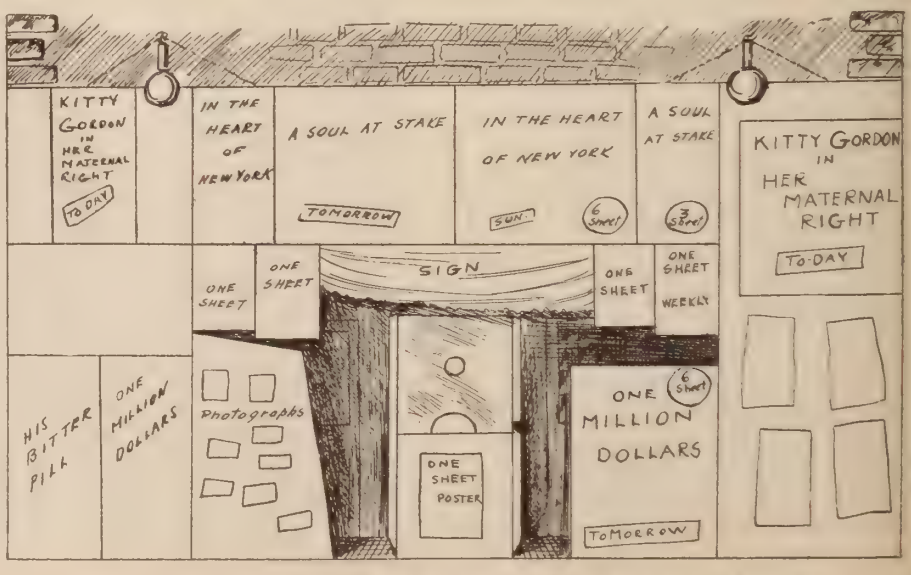
New York Behind Times in Lobby Display

By M. Kashin

COMPARISONS may be odious, but they are mighty good vehicles to convey sound, honest home-truths. This was the thought that flashed through my mind on my visit to New York a few days ago. Being naturally interested in lobby displays I took the first available opportunity to make a rapid tour of the many picture houses, hoping to pick up a few hints on display work, and generally to freshen up my ideas on the fruits of other men's labors.



But I was woefully disappointed. Instead of being ten years in advance of Montreal in regard to lobby display enterprise, the New York theatres, with the exception of the few leading ones, are fully ten years behind Montreal. At a rough estimate I calculate that ninety per cent. of the moving picture houses are dead so far as lobby displays are concerned—in fact so dead that, in my opinion, they would do better business if they dispensed with the lobby altogether. They would save the cost of the posters, and the time taken up in throwing them on the walls and other vacant places. Certainly the displays would never pull in a passer-by unless the door-man did it by physical force.

In all my life I never saw such a potpourri of posters, photographs and banners slung together without any attempt to bring out one single idea, or to back up the program screened within. It is nothing less than a crime that in these days, when the manufacturers are putting forth all they know to elevate the status of the film, when they spare no expense in securing scenarios of literary merit, and international stars, that exhibitors should display such an utter lack of progressiveness in featuring the product. It is like putting a painting by a great master in a passe partout frame. Besides from a business point of view it is suicidal.

It is evident, in my mind, that the majority of New York exhibitors have not grasped the salient points of lobby displays—that they are not merely program announcers, but wonderful business getters. Daub the front of a house with a conglomeration of one, three and six sheeters, and perhaps a banner hung crookedly, and you plant an idea of cheapness in the mind of a passer-by which does total injustice to a program that is probably one of the finest that can be booked. Flash out an original idea, focus the attention of the passer-by with a novel and original design, and you give a poor program a prestige that is really entirely undeserved. We are all swayed by impressions, and the poorest quality suit in a handsome store stands a far better chance of selling than a good quality suit in a cheap looking store.

To illustrate my point I give the following sketch of a lobby and exterior display of a theatre I saw on my visit. Can anyone imagine a more unholy attempt than this to impress the transient, and to bring in business. Here we have a hopeless jumbling of posters, photographs and a banner. It repels rather than attracts, and yet among the features there was Kitty Gordon in "The Maternal Right." Then I thought of the wasted opportunity of this exhibitor, and I said to him in my mind—"Man, do away with all that trash. What transient will be attracted by your program for the week? What does he care concerning the star you are featuring the day after tomorrow. Rather hit him with something you have ready for him—RIGHT Now."

And then I thought of the following idea, an idea which would take up no more time to prepare than the one he is now using, and certainly cost no more, if as much. In my idea you crystalize the one great and glorious feature of humanity—maternity. You flash it out so that the attention is directly concentrated on it; you interest; you attract; you arouse the curiosity—and all these forces working on the observer, you secure another patron. The display is very simple. There is a cut-out of Kitty Gordon taken from a poster at the one side; then the picture of a stork carrying a baby; and then at the extreme other side the hands of maternity stretched out eagerly. The title of the film, and the author's name occupy the rest of the space. The lower display is given up to the week's program for the benefit of regular patrons. I am a modest man, but I would wager the best hat on Broadway, that my design would fill the house, whereas the actual display, so far as my observation went, did not pull in a single passer-by.

Style Shows Still Draw Business

The Electric theatre at Springfield, Mo., was crowded to overflowing recently as a result of a style show held by the Heer Dry Goods Company. What especially interested many of the people who attended the performance was the scenery used. This scenery was brought from the Parisian theatre of London, where Anna Held did so much of her acting. All of the arts of the moving picture business were brought into use to make the effect as beautiful as possible. The twenty-five models who paraded about the stage were made more atractive by the use of electric lights of various colors. The Heer Dry Goods Company sent out a large number of invitations to its customers in the country surrounding Springfield, and these made up a large number of the crowd which witnessed the gown display. The Electric theatre gave a special program on the dates of the show.

He Uses His Opposition

W. L. Myers, proprietor of the Palace theatre in Waterloo, Ia., took notice of the advertising of one of the opposition houses recently in a novel way. After the Crystal theatre in that town had played to capacity houses for five days with "Where Are My Children?" Mr. Myers came out at the bottom of his advertisements with the following admonition: "Since you have found your children, wash their faces and bring them over to the Palace theatre this evening." The rule not to notice what your opposition is doing, could not keep him from this little joke at the expense of this sort of propaganda.

Extra Ad Aids for Serial

In connection with the publicity and advertising campaign to be launched by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company upon the release of the new serial, "The Purple Mask," the advertising department has issued a twenty-four page booklet for the use of the exhibitors.

Every phase of motion picture advertising has been covered in this campaign booklet from a complete story of the serial photodrama to ingenious stunts for the exhibitor to use to increase patronage at his house during the run of "The Purple Mask." Press sheets, synopses and a grist of news stories will also be furnished, and as a further aid there will be a judicious campaign conducted in the trade journals and newspapers as well as extensive bill board advertising.

Musicale Once a Week Feature

The Regent theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., sets aside a special night for patrons who are musically inclined, engaging the best known musical artists of the city to engage in recital on the special night, which is Friday. The Regent changes daily, and through these live wire methods of keeping up interest among all classes of patrons is enjoying capacity business.

Helping Boy Scouts

Thirty-three moving picture exhibitors of Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley, California, recently co-operated with the Boy Scout organization in its endeavor to raise funds, and the general report is that after donating a portion of their receipts on the day set aside as Boy Scout Day they still made more than would ordinarily have been expected. V. O. Lawrence, president of the local organization of Boy Scouts, who had charge of the selling campaign, states that approximately 150,000 tickets were disposed of. These were sold by the boys, and were readily bought by individuals, as well as by business and social organizations in the East-bay cities. The tickets were accepted for admission at any of the thirty-three houses listed on them, but a number were purchased that were not used, increasing the net receipts materially. This plan met with the general approval of the community, as it secured immediate value for the money spent, and theatre owners were satisfied as they were enabled to assist in the work of collecting the fund, without its being a drain upon them, as is usually the case.

The Lyric, Buffalo, Now Showing Vaudeville, Offers Suggestion for Brilliant Front. H. B. Franklin, Treasurer of Buffalo Managers' Association, Operates this and Also The Family, Buffalo's Leading Picture Theatre

If Sarah, Why Not Theda?

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt is making her farewell in New York just now, a three weeks' engagement, and the notable thing about it is the change in bill every day. Mme. Bernhardt is playing in "repertoire." This idea has recently been applied to motion pictures at the Rialto, one of San Francisco's finest theatres, where the bill usually changes weekly. Wishing to give his patrons a chance to see the Divine Theda in "repertoire," this live manager secured seven of the Fox vampings de luxe, and Miss Bara's admirers came night after night and filled the house to overflowing. Miss Bara is not the only star who could "come back" in repertoire with a daily change for a week. We hope this may suggest a few extra dollars to some exhibitor.

Stars Draw for Second Week Run

J. L. Partington, manager of the Imperial theatre, one of the finest downtown houses of San Francisco, is a firm believer in giving his patrons an opportunity occasionally of seeing in the flesh the stars they admire so much on the screen. In recent years he has presented more film stars in this manner than all the other houses of the city combined, and has found that a public notice that one of these would appear in person has been a great drawing card.

A short time ago, while featuring the production, "The Soul of Kura-San," for the second week, he was enabled to present Myrtle Stedman, Sessus Hayakawa and Tsuri Aoki, and many came the second time, just in order to see the principals in person.

More About Big Theatre Advertising in Seattle

Methods Used by "One Hundred Per Cent." Fullerton to Put the Liberty Theatre on Seattle's Amusement Map—A Publicity Presentation That Has Every Possibility

LAST week we showed some very classy pictures of window cards used by the Liberty theatre in Seattle, as part of a big publicity campaign for the theatre on their several big feature attractions. These and other ideas that have put this theatre in the front rank as advertisers were put in force by "One Hundred Percent" Fullerton. We can easily see where Mr. Fullerton gets his appellation from. For he believes in absolutely "no waste" in this most precious of departments in the theatre's business, a belief which has proven sound.

The Liberty, seating twenty-two hundred, and located in the heart of the high rent district of Seattle, begins its campaign by attracting everybody through the daily newspapers. Then, assuming even those who have not been impressed by the newspaper story may forget or lose interest, the window cards and every possible display to be had "down town" acts as a second reminder, a "Do it now" help to pull the people a block or two to the Liberty.

In order to illustrate the completeness with which Mr. Fullerton looks after the publicity presentation of each picture, we will quote from a recent letter to us describing his campaign on "The Devil's Double," a recent Triangle picture shown at the Liberty a full week, starring William S. Hart. The results have fully justified his methods.

"William S. Hart's 'Devil's Double' was a play with a world of advertising possibilities. First there was Hart the virile Westerner and a royal favorite in Seattle. The fact that it was a different type than ever essayed before by Hart. Even the title of the picture, 'The Devil's Double,' carried a suggestion that we used in our publicity. To impress on Seattle the true merit of the picture we wired Kenneth A. O'Hara, publicity manager of the Kay-Bee forces as follows: 'Please have Messrs. Ince, Hart, Hawks and yourself wire us immediately our expense separate opinions on "Devil's Double" for use in newspaper advertising. Address two telegrams Liberty Theatre others J. von Herberg, Manager.' In reply we secured the telegraphed opinions of Ince, Hart, Hawks and O'Hara. Facsimiles of the telegrams were used on our screen, the originals posted in our lobby with the still pictures of the play, and reproductions of the telegrams were used in our full page advertisement Sunday. Also quarter sheet enlargements of the telegrams from Ince and Hart were printed and posted on each one of our one and three sheet colored lithographs. Our lithographer said that no sooner were the telegrams posted than people came and read them. (Maybe curiosity killed a cat, but its mighty good stuff to base an advertising appeal on.) The cut used in our newspaper advertising, on the screen and on our window-card was Hart as a faro-dealer with a black shadow of the devil's head behind his and the words "William S. Hart in 'The Devil's Double'" displayed across his vest. In the window cards these letters were red, with red flames leaping from them. We played the feature an entire week, the first Hart play to have a week's engagement at the Liberty and although it did not break our 'Peggy' records, the attendance was highly satisfactory as evidenced by the box-office receipts.

"The accompanying photograph of the banners on the building under construction depicts the biggest billing scoop ever achieved in Seattle. The building shown is the center of traffic movement in Seattle. It is estimated that over 200,000 people pass this spot daily. This means that the whole population sees it in time.

"The larger banner is sixty feet long and three feet deep and the smaller one is twenty-five feet by three feet. As will be noticed the first, second and third stories are billed with one sheets on the attraction advertised.

Metro Announces 12 Features for New Year

"Vanity," with Emmy Wehlen, Is Set for Release on January 1; "Wife by Proxy" on the 15th

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has just announced its releases for the period from January 1 to March 19, inclusive. The list embraces twelve subjects as follows:

January 1, "Vanity," with Emmy Wehlen; January 8, "A Wife by Proxy," with Mabel Taliaferro; January 15, "The White Raven," Ethel Barrymore; January 22, "The Promise," Harold Lockwood and May Allison; January 29, "The End of the Tour," Lionel Barrymore; February 5, "The Weaker Sex," Mme. Petrova; February 12, "One of Many," Frances Nelson; January 19, "Threads of Fate," Viola Dana; January 26, "The Belle of the Season," Emmy Wehlen; March 5, "The Secret of Eve," Mme. Petrova; March 12, "The Beautiful Lie," Frances Nelson; March 19, "The Hidden Spring," Harold Lockwood and May Alliosn.

Besides these plays, Metro will have another New Year's offering in its serial, "The Great Secret," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. The serial is in fifteen chapters, each chapter consisting of two reels. More than $500,000 was spent on the production, in which 600 people took part, Metro announces.

The first feature to be released, "Vanity," with Emmy Wehlen, is a story of a young woman who is trapped by her love for finery. It was written by Aaron Hoffman, and the scenario was prepared by Wallace C. Clifton. John B. O'Brien directed the production.

In this production Miss Wehlen has an opportunity to appear in gowns of the latest style. Supporting her are such actors as Paul Gordon, Edward Martindell and Tom O'Keefe.

"A Wife by Proxy," with Mabel Taliaferro, is a story of an Irish lass who comes to America in search of fortune and, obtaining a position in the home of a bachelor, becomes the means of unearthing a great blackmailing plot. The story was written by John B. Clymer and Charles A. Logue, and the scenario prepared by June Mathis. John H. Collins directed the production, which is presented by the Columbia Pictures Corporation.

"The White Raven" pictures Ethel Barrymore. In it she is seen first as a dance hall girl in Alaska, and again as a grand opera prima donna in New York. The story was written by Charles A. Logue. It is presented by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison will begin the New Year with the picturization of a famous novel, "The Promise," as their first vehicle. The production, directed by Jay Hunt, was made at the Yorke studios, Hollywood, Cal. This is Mr. Hunt's first production under the Metro banner. The story, picturized by Richard V. Spencer, is a tale of the great Northwest and of a man who kept his word.

In the cast are George Fisher, Pomeroy Cannon, Lester Cuneo and Lillian Hayward.

Lionel Barrymore appears to great advantage in "The End of the Tour," which is presented by the Columbia Pictures Corporation. This play deals with the tribulations of a stranded road company.

Gertrude McCoy Is a School Teacher in "The Lash of Destiny"

In the first Art Drama production "The Lash of Destiny," which will be released December 21, Miss McCoy plays the part of a country school teacher who goes to the city to develop her voice. While there, she obtains work in a cabaret, and is subjected to all the temptations that surround a young woman in her position.

The heavy part of the production is entrusted to Arthur Housman. Duncan McRae plays opposite Miss McCoy, as he has done so often in the past, when they were together at the Edison Company.

Bluebird Program Is Rearranged

GENERAL MANAGER M. H. HOFFMAN has rearranged the program of Bluebirds for January, retaining all of the subjects previously announced, but placing their order of release in a more advantageous routine. "Black Orchids," with Cleo Madison; "The Piper's Price," featuring Dorothy Phillips; "Her Soul's Inspiration," with Ella Hall the star; "God's Crucible," with George Hernandez, and "The Devil's Pay Day," with Franklyn Farnum, constitutes the new arrangement.

Cleo Madison, in Rex Ingram's production of "Black Orchids," will be the New Year Day attraction. Wedgewood Nowell, Francis McDonald, William Dyer, Richard La Reno and Howard Crampton will be prominent in Miss Madison's support. The recent Ingram-Madison attraction, "The Chalice of Sorrow," will give exhibitors an idea of what they may expect from "Black Orchids" in the way of beautiful production and skillful acting.

Dorothy Phillips, who is the Bluebird star in "The Price of Silence," will on January 8 return to the admirers she has created to present "The Piper's Price," a new treatment of the divorce question. Maude George will be the "heavy lady"; William Stowell the leading man and Lon Chaney the hero in a mixed foursome of domestic infelicity. Joseph De Grasse made the production from Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's story, prepared for the screen by Ida May Park.

Bluebird No. 52 will have Ella Hall as its star, the first year of the series terminating in an intensely dramatic offering, entitled "Her Soul's Inspiration." Jack Conway directed the feature from Harris Anson's story, "Mary Keep Your Feet Still," scenarioized by Maie Havey. How a little girl, "born with music in her feet," attains her ambition to become a famous dancer is told in interesting detail with Richard Ryan, Edward Hearn, Marcia Moore, Margaret Whistler and Marc Robbins assisting Miss Hall in the presentation.

Bluebird will offer on January 22 "God's Crucible," in which George Hernandez will be the star with Val Paul and Myrtle Gonzales as featured players.

January 29 Franklyn Farnum will be the star of "The Devil's Pay Day," with Leah Baird, his leading lady. George Hively's story was reduced to screen form by Fred Mynton and William Worthington directed the production. Charles Perly, Seymour Hastings, Gertrude Aster and Countess Du Cello are leaders in the supporting cast. The point of "The Devil's Pay Day" is retribution that follows a clubman's ill treatment of his country-bred wife, and, as the title indicates, the debt is paid

Kleine Representative Tells of Plans for 1917

Edison, Selig and Essanay All Contribute Toward Big Kleine Start with Exclusive Star Master Pictures

"A RETROSPECTIVE view of the work accomplished and results achieved during the past three months by Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service is satisfactory indeed and when it is considered that the volume of business exceeded our expectations, furnishing proof that exhibitors approve thoroughly of our new booking plan and were glad to get pictures of the K-E-S-E calibre, it certainly augurs well for the year we are about to begin," said a representative of George Kleine last week when asked what the outlook appeared to be for 1917.

"K-E-S-E 1917 business will really begin with their last release this year, Dec. 25th: Essanay's 'The Truant Soul,' featuring Henry B. Walthall and presenting Mary Charleson as co-star," he continued. "This has been booked at the first-run houses during Christmas week and it will give 1917 a flying start. If there existed any doubt as to the welcome this picture would receive at the hands of exhibitors, it was swept away after the first trade showing at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago, Tuesday, Dec. 12th. Five hundred exhibitors accepted Mr. Geo. K. Spoor's (Essanay's president) invitation to view 'The Truant Soul.' Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Ohio exhibitors were represented. The screen time is two hours, and when it was finished five hundred exhibitors got into communication with Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay exchanges and arranged for bookings.

"It may be that enthusiasm was kindled by the presence of the stars, Mr. Walthall and Miss Charleson, who, after the picture had been shown, addressed the exhibitors for a few minutes, each receiving an ovation, Miss Charleson being fairly buried with floral offerings. It was her first big production under Essanay's banner, to be released through K-E-S-E. President Spoor of Essanay was outspoken in his commendation of Mr. Walthall's and Miss Charleson's work and was beaming as he heard Mr. Walthall tell these exhibitors that he considered 'The Truant Soul' the best thing he had ever done. Victor Rousseau's story will live long by reason of this picturization.

"The year 1917 will bring to the K-E-S-E Service, Max Linder, the famous Frenchman who is just completing his first picture for Essanay under a contract that is to run one year and calls for a picture every thirty days, each approximating 30 minutes screen time. Linder will be a big star because of his established reputation and acknowledged ability. He is already at work on his first production, which he expects to have completed shortly after January first. This picture deals with his trip to America from France and Essanay studio folks, privileged to view it in the making, pronounce it the best bit of comedy ever screened in this country.

"Another feature for the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service during 1917 will be the picturization of three Cohan and Harris productions at the Essanay studio. President Geo. K. Spoor purchased the motion picture rights for these and the work of production will begin soon after January first. These plays are: 'Hawthorne of the U. S. A.,' 'Young America,' and 'On Trial.'

"'Young America' was the story built around a boy's love for a dog, which was presented last season. 'On Trial' made a notable history for itself on the stage, which doubtless will be repeated on the screen. These three Essanay features will be directed by James K. Young, one of the best known directors, and each will be designed for a screen time of approximately one hour and twenty minutes. Mr. Young's career in pictures has given him many strong Vitagraph, World and Lasky features to his credit.

"Selig's studios also are scenes of activity these days, for the coming year. William Selig has placed his best scenario writers, directors, and players at the exclusive disposal of K-E-S-E Service and is now busily engaged producing 'Little Lost Sister,' scheduled for release Jan. 8th and 'Princess of Patches,' scheduled for Feb. 19th. Vivian Reed will probably be featured in 'Princess of Patches.'

"Edison productions will figure largely in the early months of 1917 in K-E-S-E Service, 'Master Passion' being booked for release Jan. 22nd and 'Princess from the Poor House' Feb. 12th, followed by 'Builder of Castles' March 11th. There may be a re-christening of the former and another name selected before the release date. Edison's releases in this service have been tentatively decided upon as far ahead as April 1st, when 'Law of the North' will be represented.

"At the Essanay studios Henry B. Walthall has almost completed 'Little Shoes,' scheduled for release Jan. 15th.

"Mr. Spoor is assembling a cast for 'Skinner's Dress Suit,' taken from the story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. This is scheduled for release Feb. 5th.

"'Understanding Adora,' another Essanay feature, is listed for release March 4th."

"Betty to the Rescue," Lasky, a January Release

Though California gives to the motion picture screen more settings than any other State in the Union, it seldom is made the acknowledged background for a photoplay. In the Lasky production "Betty to the Rescue" in which Fannie Ward stars on the Paramount Program, Jan. 15, California gold mines and orange groves are said to give a genuine Golden Gate flavor to the story. The scenes were all taken within a comparatively short distance of the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

The story was written by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun and was directed by Frank Reicher. In the cast are included Jack Dean, Lillian Leighton, Charles H. West, James Neill and Ted Duncan.

Varied Themes in December 25 Universals

As a fitting end to the year 1916, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company offers one of the strongest programs in its history for the week of December 25. Varied in theme, novel in plot, and acted by players of note, the week's releases reach the high-water mark in film production.

The feature of the program is the appearance for the first time of the new Universal super serial, "The Purple Mask," in which Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are the stars.

This serial, which will be released in two-reel episodes for sixteen weeks, is unique among photoplay serials in that each episode is a distinct and separate mystery drama. The serial was written by Miss Cunard and directed by Mr. Ford. In the cast supporting the stars are such well-known screen artists as Gene Hathaway, Peter Gerald, Jerry Ash, Mario Bianchi, John Featherstone and John Duffy.

The first episode of "The Purple Mask," entitled "The Vanishing Jewels," will appear during the week of the twenty-fifth.

Sharing honors with the new serial is the Red Feather five-act feature, "A Child of Mystery," a stirring heart interest drama, with Hobart Henley and Gertrude Selby in the leading roles. This release was written by Willard Mack, the well-known playwright and produced by Hobart Henley. It is a story of the love and hatred of the residents of the Italian quarter of a large American city.

The settings, lighting, photography and detail are up to the high standard demanded in Red Feather productions. In the cast are: Thomas Jefferson, son of Joseph Jefferson, most loved of American actors; Paul Bryon, Alfred Allen, Mark Fenton and Nanine Wright. "A Child of Mystery" will be released on Christmas Day. Under the Nestor brand, the one-act comedy, "Pretty Baby," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edyth Roberts as the chief funmakers, will appear the same day.

Kalem's Final 1916 Releases

As a fitting close to a year of excellent pictures, profitable both to exhibitors and to themselves, the Kalem Company announces "The Quest of the Golden Goat" as the final Ham Comedy of 1916; released Tuesday, December 26; "A Mission of State," a single reel episode of "Grant, Police Reporter," released Friday, December 29; and "A Race with Death," one of the "Hazards of Helen," for release on Saturday, December 30.

Bearing out Kalem's boast of "perfect continuity," these releases are packed with sensational thrills, of a dramatic and comic nature. The usual Kalem standard of photography prevails. George Larkin, the man unafraid, in "A Mission of State," will bring gasps from his audiences by a daring leap from the roof of a two-story house into the branches of a tree and by his nicely calculated drop into a speeding automobile from a thirty foot bridge. Helen Gibson's stunt in "A Race with Death," is very spectacular and is probably one of the most perilous things she has ever done.

No Let Up in World Production

THERE is no let-up in the World Film Corporation's policy of producing plays far in advance of the dates set for their release—the many advantages of which are so obvious as to require little or no explanation at this time.

"We are now working on pictures which will not be released in the ordinary course of affairs until next June," said Director General William A. Brady in referring to the current operations of his company. "Nobody however need take it as a positive statement that none of these plays actually will be presented before the interval has expired.

"One of the high points of our plan of accumulating completed plays is that in the possibility of circumstances arising under which any of our material should become of peculiarly timely value we would be in a position to substitute it upon our program at a moment's notice without disturbing the continuity of our productions in the least.

"For example, events in Europe might at any instant concentrate attention upon Russia in a way to render the public mind peculiarly receptive to a stirring story of life in the Czar's domain. In that case we would be ready to put forward Alice Brady in 'The Snowbird' at once, although this photoplay is not scheduled for release until March 19.

"'The Snowbird,' by the by, contains some unusual spectacular features, among them a complete production of the ballet 'Scheherazade,' the principal roles danced by Alice Brady and Alexis Kosloff, with a corps of 100 Russian dancers. This ballet was devised and directed by Kosloff expressly for the present picture, the scene showing the interior of the Imperial Opera House during a performance. Miss Brady for the past three months has been taking instruction in dancing for this particular picture, going to Mr. Kosloff's studio every evening, and I am free to say that her work in 'Scheherazade' is entirely remarkable.

"Following in due course among our new releases not previously announced will be Ethel Clayton in 'The House Cat,' with Rockcliffe Fellowes; Lew Fields in 'The Corner Grocery,' with Doris Kenyon; Alice Brady in 'Motherhood,' supported by Edward Langford and John Bowers; Gail Kane in 'Glass Houses,' with Evelyn Greeley, Frank Mills and Gerda Holmes; Carlyle Blackwell and Olive Tell in 'Who is Sylvia,' with June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley; and Kitty Gordon in 'The Haunting Shadow,' with Montagu Love and Alex Frances. There are four others in hand for which titles have not been chosen as yet.

"Definitely dated for release, subject of course to change, are Alice Brady in 'A Woman Alone,' January 1; Gail Kane and Carlyle Blackwell in 'On Dangerous Ground,' January 8; Robert Warwick, in 'The Man Who Forgot,' with Gerda Holmes and Doris Kenyon, January 15; Ethel Clayton in 'The Bondage of Fear, with Rockcliffe Fellowes, Arthur Ashley and Henry Hull, January 22; Marie Dressler, with Johnny Hines in 'Tillie Wakes Up,' January 29; Gail Kane in 'Her God,' February 5; Alice Brady in 'Frou Frou,' February 12; Carlyle Blackwell with June Elvidge, Muriel Ostriche and Henry Hull, in 'The Parasites,' February 19; Ethel Clayton in 'The Web of Desire,' with Rockcliffe Fellowes, February 26; Robert Warwick in 'A Girl's Folly,' with Doris Kenyon, March 5; Carlyle Blackwell, with June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley, in 'The Eleventh Hour,' March 12; Alice Brady in 'The Snowbird,' March 19.

Will Show Five Chapters of Metro Serial to Trade

In response to thousands of queries from exhibitors regarding "The Great Secret," the new Metro serial, with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne as co-stars, the Metro Pictures Corporation has arranged to show the first five chapters, for exhibitors only, throughout the United States and Canada.

The biggest of these showings will be in New York City. Arrangements have been made for projecting the chapters in a theatre on Broadway, with an orchestral accompaniment. Exhibitors are showing an interest in this, the first serial to be offered by Metro, and the demand for it already is much greater than had been anticipated.

"The Great Secret" is the first serial in which Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne have appeared. It has been produced under the direction of William Christy Cabanne, who was chief of staff for D. W. Griffith.

Thanhouser Is Pleased with Coming Releases

Going over the Thanhouser-Pathe program for the next three months, Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, known as "a man of few words," announced "I am well pleased."

"'Her' New York," starring Gladys Hulette, is the first Gold Rooster comedy drama to be released in the New Year, on January 7. Agnes C. Johnston wrote the story. Others in the cast are William Parke, Jr., Riley Chamberlin, Carey Hastings, Robert Vaughn and Ethyle Cooke.

Then comes Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz) in "The Image Maker," on January 21—a drama of reincarnation involving a motion picture company supposed to be working in Thebes, Egypt, with the ruins of temples and tombs for background. W. Eugene Moore is responsible for the direction, and Valkyrien was supported by Harris Gordon, Arthur Bauer, Inda Palmer and Morgan Jones.

"A Modern Monte Christo," starring Vincent Serrano, is the first February release. It is by Lloyd Lonergan and directed by Eugene Moore. Florence La Badie in "The Girl Who Wanted to Live" follows, the story being written by Philip Lonergan and directed by Fred Sullivan.

And then comes a classic that is the pride of Mr. Thanhouser's heart, "The Vicar of Wakefield," starring Frederick Warde under the direction of his son, Ernest Warde.

"For a story of its kind, I think this picture will thrill America," asserted Mr. Thanhouser. "It is a smoothly flowing condensation of Goldsmith's famous story, and nothing better has ever been done with a classic story in this studio, or elsewhere, if I may boast a bit."

One of the most elaborate features of "The Vicar of Wakefield" is a prison scene that is quite out of the ordinary. It is the debtors' prison, a great spacious rock-walled hall, that takes up the entire stage in New Rochelle.

"Truant Soul" Is Welcomed by the Trade

"The Truant Soul," Henry B. Walthall's latest feature, was shown to the trade Tuesday, December 12. The exhibition was given by George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, at the Studebaker theatre, Chicago. Five hundred exhibitors and newspaper men were present, scores of the former coming from Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana and down state Illinois cities.

The film is released Christmas day through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service. "The Truant Soul's" screen time is two hours.

During the intermission Henry B. Walthall was given an ovation. The star gave a three-minute address from his box, declaring the picture to be his masterpiece. Miss Mary Charleson, who appears in the leading feminine role, was also present. The dainty little star was almost inundated with roses floral offerings from her admirers. It was her first big production under Essanay's banner.

Variety General Film Keynote

General Film Service for week December 25-30, inclusive, has reserved for its first day's entertainment, which is Christmas Day, very appropriate films. "The Golden Thought," a two-reel Selig drama featuring Tom Mix, Victoria Forde and the wonderful little juvenile actress, Baby Lillian Wade. As the title would imply, the story carries a good moral. "A Journey to Nowhere," a Vitagraph comedy, follows with "Some of Our Biggest Star Performers" to round it out to one reel. This is followed by the Selig-Tribune. "Two Men of the Desert," a Biograph one-reel drama, features Henry Walthall and Walter Miller. The scenes are laid in the gold fields of California and drift with the story to the city. Blanche Sweet plays the feminine lead in this heart-stirring picture of love and sacrifice.

Shirley Mason—McClure Pictures

The fourth of "The Black Cat Features" by Essanay under the caption, "A Tale from the Decameron," a two-part drama featuring Nell Craig and Ernest Maupain, will be the first picture screened Tuesday. This will be followed by a Kalem one-reel comedy, "The Quest of the Golden Goat," with Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch supplying the fun.

The Essanay Canimated Nooz Pictorial, No. 21, together with some scenes of Lake Tahoe, Cal., is followed by a Vim one-reel comedy, "A Financial Frenzy," in which the comedy pair, Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, are seen. A Biograph two-reel drama, "The Rehearsal," featuring Vera Sisson and Jose Ruben, will close the program for the day.

Selig-Tribune News reel showing pictorially all the news both here and abroad, together with the very latest fashions and a Vim one-reel comedy will be Thursday's offering.

Kalem supplies "A Mission of State," a one-reel drama of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series, in which Ollie Kirkby and George Larkin play the leads. Then Mary Anderson will be seen in "The Luck Charm," the second of the "Dangers of Doris" series offered by Vitagraph, followed by "The Property Man," a one-reel Vim comedy, featuring Pokes and Jabbs.

The third of Essanay's "Is Marriage Sacred?" series under the title, "Wife in Sunshine," featuring Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold and Sydney Ainsworth is the picture first flashed on the screen for Saturday. Helen Gibson, the "Railroad Girl," is seen in "A Race with Death," an episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen Series," followed by "The Right Hand Path," a Selig one-reel drama, featuring Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley. This closes the General Film program for the day, week and year.

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

Selznick Pictures Booked in Cleveland

The Alhambra and the New Mall, Cleveland, have joined forces to pick forthcoming plums of the picture world.

It was said that these theatres have outbid others for the Selznick pictures, which include Nazimova in "War Brides," Norma Talmadge, Robert Warwick and Clara Kimball Young, after Clara's next production, "The Foolish Virgin," which had already been booked.

The joint management of the two houses is understood to have put up a $10,000 cash deposit for Selznick's output.

In addition, it is also made known, the theatres will have first choice of the Hearst International, Pathe and Metro pictures, including the latter's forthcoming serial, "The Great Secret," starring probably the most popular team in filmdom, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

The two houses will have a seating capacity of 2,500, and contemplate booking also the big super-pictures released by different producers from time to time.

"Life of Our Saviour" in Demand in Omaha Territory

The Pathe picture, "Life of Our Saviour," released two years ago in the Omaha territory, has developed an unusual demand. Two prints of the picture have been worn out, and the demand is growing, six being received in one day last week. Towns of 400 inhabitants willingly pay twenty-five dollars a day for the picture.

It is alone in its field in the Omaha territory. Exhibitors think producers should get out similar subjects. "The life of Paul, more exciting than any modern man's, would make a splendid picture," said one exhibitor.

"Little Mary Sunshine," and its companion, "Shadows and Sunshine," are in great demand, too. L. Weil, owner of the Strand theatre at Sioux City, Ia., showed the latter picture on Thanksgiving Day at the Strand, and it was such a success he immediately booked it for his other Sioux City house, the Royal, where it was an equal success. Now he is anxious for more like it.

Backer Reports Good Booking for "Libertine"

F. E. Backer, general manager of the Mammoth Film Corporation, reports that "The Libertine" is booking so strongly that he has been compelled to purchase four additional prints.

He has just signed up the B. S. Moss and the Proctor and Keith circuits for all their theatres. He is also sending out eight road shows throughout New York State and the New England states, and has already received bookings for indefinite runs in Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse.

The Rialto theatre in Brooklyn has played "The Libertine" for a week's run and did a smashing big business.

"Is Any Girl Safe?" Has Two-Week Run

Alfred H. McClelland, president of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, was in Cincinnati last week and delivered an address before the members of the Cincinnati Screen Club. He is at present associated with the Anti-Vice Motion Picture Company and is handling "Is Any Girl Safe?" for the company in southern Ohio territory.

The picture opened for a two weeks' run at the Alhambra theatre in Cincinnati and has since been doing capacity business. Mr. McClelland states that he has done better than be expected with the pictures and that the S. R. O. sign hangs out early.

Extra Prints Made by Kalem

So many exhibitors using General Film Service have written in to the Kalem Company and to the head office of the General Film Company to report that they find it difficult to always obtain Kalem films, that action to remedy this condition has been taken.

Extra prints of "The Girl from 'Frisco" series, the "Grant, Police Reporter" series, the "Hazards of Helen" and the Ham Comedies, are now being shipped to the various General Film exchanges on a schedule well in advance of the release dates. Hereafter and henceforth there will be sufficient prints of all Kalem pictures on hand in the General Film exchanges to supply the growing demand for them.

The bad weather which has bothered every California producer recently assumed a critical state, but Kalem, at least, has overcome this temporary handicap and with a goodly supply of negatives in its New York factory is no longer worrying about the state of the weather on the Coast.

"Myra" Going Well in Ohio

International reports that "The Mysteries of Myra" is doing good business throughout the country. The latest returns come from Cleveland, Ohio, where the United States theatre began the serial December 4 before the largest audience in its history.

Yanks Like Billy West

S. M. Moscow, manager of the Boston exchange of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, announces that the "Billy West Comedies" have proved to be a success, to quote from Mr. Moscow's letter:

"I have just seen 'His Waiting Career' at an invitation screening which was attended by exhibitors throughout New England territory and to say that they were pleased would be putting it mildly."

"Purity" Does Good Business in Jersey and Pennsylvania

The fact that the Pennsylvania Board of Censors withheld their verdict for so long a time in the passing of "Purity," the film in which Audrey Munson stars, is bringing this feature added returns in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, because of the ease with which it passed the censors in other localities.

Because "Purity" was withheld, has made the public inquisitive and insistent in their demands to exhibitors to show it in the theatres which they patronize.

Letters which have come in from the different exhibitors, all testify to the increased interest displayed in this feature.

"Gloria" Still in Demand

Reports from George Kleine's office states that "Gloria's Romance" is still being booked heavily by exhibitors. They are pleased to learn that the dominating note of the serial is sustained interest and that each chapter contains a genuine thrill.

A stirring fist fight, an automobile smashup, a rescue from drowning, the heroine's adventures in a Bowery dance hall, a running fight on a river, and a nip-and-tuck rescue of a woman seeking suicide on the railroad tracks are some few of the sensational episodes which await the exhibitor booking this serial.

"Gloria's Romance" is also notable for its many scenes of fashionable life at Palm Beach, Florida.

New Print of "Neptune's Daughter" in Canada

Clair Hague, general manager of the Universal Film Company of Canada, has announced that he is bringing out a print of Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter" for his territory. This film which has enjoyed a most remarkable popularity in Canada does not seem to lose its attractiveness at all, as it is now playing a double return in many towns and cities throughout Canada, as evidenced by the need of a new print in almost three years of use.

Omaha Wants More of "Girl from 'Frisco"

Manager C. W. Taylor of the Omaha General Film office has bought another print of "The Girl from 'Frisco." "They are wanting this series of pictures, each complete in itself and only two reels long," says Mr. Taylor.

Constant Demand for Constance

Constance Talmadge is the latest star to appear on the Triangle-Fine Arts program.

In recognition of her work in support of Wilfred Lucas in "The Microscope Mystery," and of Douglas Fairbanks in "The Matrimaniac," it has been decided to give Miss Talmadge the opportunity that her talents deserve.

A new play, replete with comedy situations, has been prepared by Mary H. O'Connor of the Fine Arts scenario department, and Miss Talmadge's company, under the direction of Paul Powell, has already left for the Santa Cruz mountains of northern California to begin active work.

Good Booking of "Gloria" and "Whip" in Capital

Rudolph Berger, manager of the Washington, D. C., exchange for Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay productions reports business in fine condition. "'Gloria's Romance' still continues popular," he commented, "while 'The Return of Eve' and 'The Cossack Whip' have surprised the exhibitors with their drawing power. When a production is able to show itself a bigger box office attraction than was anticipated, I feel its future is assured; and when the exhibitor takes the time and consideration to tell you this fact I know we have given the public what it wants. This is what I am receiving in my territory from 'The Return of Eve' and 'The Cossack Whip.'"

The Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay has an attractive office, being located at the corner of F and 6th streets, occupying the entire ground floor of the building. Mr. Berger keeps the window display alluring to passers-by, by making subtitle changes.

"Fall of a Nation" Raises Attendance in Montreal

E. L. Perry, manager of the St. Denis theatre, Montreal, the largest playhouse in the Dominion, was arrested by the civil authorities early in the month for overcrowding his house. "The Fall of a Nation," by Thomas Dixon and Victor Herbert, was the attraction.

The seating capacity of the St. Denis is 2,600. Mr. Perry was charged with having permitted almost a thousand beyond this number to enter his house. The performances complained of occurred on the day after All Saints, a big French holiday, when a slump in attendance is usually the case.

A compromise between Mr. Perry and W. C. Gookin, Canadian manager for "The Fall of a Nation," which is being distributed by Vitagraph-V-L-S-E, was reached, so that the run of the picture at the St. Denis was extended, all other programs being shelved for the time being, and an extra print of "The Fall of a Nation" for Mr. Perry's use was obtained.

K-E-S-E Pictures Booked in the Strand, Nashville

One of the new arrivals in Nashville last week was Wallace Walthall, special representative of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service of Atlanta, Ga. While in the city he was the guest of General Manager Carson Bradford of the Strand. Wallace Walthall is the brother of Henry B. Walthall, the distinguished screen artist. In speaking of the large amount of business his company was obtaining throughout the territory worked by him, Mr. Walthall had the following to say to a representative of the NEWS:

"You can go on record and say that my company is now enjoying one of the most profitable and most successful seasons of bookings that has ever been done out of the Atlanta office. Our season of 1916 has been a most profitable one in every way, but we intend to outstrip ourselves during the year of 1917.

"Our productions now are being sought after by a host of exhibitors throughout the territory out of the Atlanta office. General Manager Carson Bradford of the Strand has secured "The Truant Soul," with Henry B. Walthall. General Manager Bradford has now secured and is playing all of the big features of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service. Another feature secured by the Strand is "The Cossack Whip." W. R. ARNOLD.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

"Hall of Fame" in Park for Fox Pictures

"Hall of Fame" for Fox Pictures Structure Will Be Erected in Central Park, New York, and Notable Subjects Preserved for Future

THE statement comes from the Fox offices that Mr. Fox plans spending a million dollars for the erection of a celluloid "Hall of Fame" in Central Park, New York.

It further says that John Frederick Harbeson, an architect of Philadelphia, is at work on the plans.

Mr. Fox, it is further stated, was inspired by a view of "The Honor System," which as a portrayal of prison brutality he thinks should be preserved as a warning to future generations.

He will have this "mausoleum" an immense building, fireproof, containg vaults for storing films in airtight holders to prevent decomposition. There Miss Bara and her associates will repose for fifty years, and on that anniversary of deposit shown to an audience of historians.

A large projection room is to be a part of the building, and the vaults will be filled at the rate of ten films a year, to be chosen by the board of trustees. It is not their intention to place in the collection any but films of historical value, but the storehouse will be open to the reception of any producer's effort if it meet with the trustees' approval.

The building will be commenced, it is said, as soon as the site is selected and the architect has his plans completed.

Pennsylvania Passes "Sex Lure"

Despite the fact that the title of "The Sex Lure," the last release of the Ivan Film Company, was stormed with adverse criticism by the authorities in New York City, the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, one of the strictest in the country, after due examination passed without restriction both the title and subject matter of this photoplay.

Francelia Billington Signed for American Film

Announcement is made by Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., of the signing of a contract with Francelia Billington, one of the most brilliant young film actresses of today, to appear in a series of dramatic productions in support of and opposite William Russell.

Mr. Russell, who is famed for his work under American-Mutual auspices in "Soulmates," "The Highest Bid," "The Strength of Donald McKenzie," "The Man Who Would Not Die," "The Torchbearer," "The Love Hermit," "Lone Star," and "The Twinkler,' is already engaged in studying over several new plays in which he and Miss Billington are to appear.

The negotiations with Miss Billington have been under way for some time and they have now been completed. Mr. Hutchinson has just returned from California where he held the final conference with Miss Billington which resulted in her signing the American contract.

Announcement will be made shortly of the new plays in which Mr. Russell and Miss Billington will appear. These will include some new dramas of which no mention has as yet been made, their acceptance having been made contingent on the approval of the two stars who are now looking the manuscripts over.

Miss Billington's first experience in motion picture work was with the Kalem company, with which she played leads for a year before joining the New York Motion Picture Company under whose auspices she appeared in "Ruy Blas," "The Lovers' Plight," "The Peach Brand," "The Intruder" and other features.

"Snow White" is First Paramount Six-Reeler

Famous Players have decided to issue the fairy tale, "Snow White," starring Marguerite Clark, in six reels. It will be the first picture of this length ever released on the Paramount Program. The average Paramount picture consists of only five parts, any variation being in the direction of abbreviation.

All the exterior scenes in this picture were staged in Georgia, and the interiors at the Famous Players' studio in New York. The camera work, which was especially difficult because of the great amount of trick exposure in depicting the magic and witchcraft surrounding Snow White, was done by Lyman Broening.

Creighton Hale supports Miss Clark and Lionel Braham with seven midget actors seen as the dwarfs. It was Director J. Searle Dawley's inability to make cuts in his complete six reel film that suggested its release in the greater length.

After cutting out much footage, Dawley still had six reels of meat left and although repeated inspection convinced him he could make no further eliminations without injury to the entirety, he called in Frank Meyers, laboratory superintendent, as an unprejudiced party. Meyers declared it could not be cut.

Dawley then communicated with Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky and at the ensuing showing Miss Clark was also present. The consequent consultation proved him right, and an extra reel of Marguerite Clark in this delightful fairy story will be Paramount's gift to Christmas bookers.

Selig Folks Back Home

Director Al Green, and the members of the Selig Stock Company are in Chicago after a sojourn in Mississippi and Tennessee where they filmed scenes for "The Princess of Patches." Southern scenes called for in Mark Swan's play, including cotton plantations, etc., were filmed. The company were guests at many social functions while in the Southland.

Kalem Signs Bechdolt for Scripts

IN line with its recently announced policy, that of establishing an "author's contributing department," the Kalem Company has contracted with Fred R. Bechdolt, writer of thrilling fiction, to prepare an indefinite number of additional episodes of "The Girl from Frisco." This acquisition to Kalem's scenario department follows closely the news that "The Girl from Frisco" series of two-reelers will be continued indefinitely in response to a general demand by exhibitors.

Robert Welles Ritchie, who has prepared all of the "Frisco" scripts up to this time, will now devote his entire time and attention to the "Grant, Police Reporter" series being produced by Director Robert Ellis with George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby as the stars. Authors Ritchie and Bechdolt are fast friends and, in fact, it was Mr. Ritchie who succeeded in interesting Mr. Bechdolt in scenario writing.

Bechdolt has been living all his life the stories that he is now writing for the Kalem Company. When but a small boy he ran away from home and was found later by his parents on the ranch of a relative in Montana. He attended the University of Washington at Seattle but, filled with the wanderlust, went to Alaska just before the big gold rush of 1897. He did placer mining, living in a tent when the thermometer registered 60 below zero.

Returning to the States, Bechdolt took up newspaper work in earnest and spent in all about ten years on first one newspaper and then another. When he was with the Los Angeles Examiner, Death Valley Scotty began his sensational spending and exploitation of fake mines. Refused an assignment to "get" the truth about Scotty, he shifted to the Los Angeles News and the story that he eventually turned in to the city editor of that paper, after trailing Scotty all over the Mojave Desert, was one of the biggest "scoops" ever put over in newspaperdom.

After this achievement, Bechdolt began to "land" regularly in the biggest magazines in the country. With James Hopper he wrote the serial "9009," the story of a convict which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. He also wrote the Post serial, "The Hard Rock Man." His "Lighthouse Tom" stories ran for eighteen months in The Red Book, and he has been a consistent contributor to Collier's and Everybody's Magazine.

With such training and such a fund of experience to draw from, Kalem's newest scenario contributor should be able to weave a spell of enchanting glamor around Marin Sais, who as everybody knows, is the heroine of "The Girl from Frisco."

Photoplay Edition of Answer to Caine Novel

Beyond all other of Hall Caine's works, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" created worldwide comment at the time of its publication. Indeed, an American novelist, J. Wesley Putnam, issued a special book in answer to the celebrated English author's remarkable story; and now Herbert Blache has made a special feature film of the "answer" for the Art Dramas program.

Because of the fresh interest aroused in the Caine-Putnam books by the issuance of the film, the Macauley Company, New York publishers, are putting out a photoplay edition of the Putnam story.

Jean Sothern is the star of the picture, whose title, like that of Mr. Putnam's book, is "Whoso Findeth a Wife." Miss Sothern is Elizabeth Ferris, the heroine, of course. Leo Delaney plays the husband, who discovers, immediately after the marriage, that his bride, Elizabeth, doesn't love him. At her clergyman's instance she endeavors to fall in love with him, but does not succeed.

However, her mate is a real man, and will not force his attentions upon his bride. Instead, he seeks to "clear the road" for her by taking his own life—but Elizabeth prevents, and her husband's act brings sentiment to the surface. In the supporting cast are: Kirk Brown, William O'Neil, Ina Brooks and George Henry Trader. Frank Hall Crane directed the production.

Marjorie Rambeau Picture Under Way

The first picture featuring Marjorie Rambeau, the newly acquired Powell-Mutual star, "The Greater Woman," by Algernon Boyeson, has been put under way at the studios of the Powell Producing Corporation at College Point, Long Island.

The actress in this Mutual production is surrounded by a cast consisting of Josephine Park, Sara Haidez, Margaret Gray, Aubrey Beattie, Frank Russell, Hassen Musselli and Frank Ford.

Frank Powell has engaged Robert Elliott as leading man for Nance O'Neil in the first of the series of O'Neil pictures, which will be distributed through the Mutual Film Corporation. This will be a picturization of "Mrs. Balfame," the first of Gertrude Atherton's novels to be transferred to the screen, in which Mr. Elliott will play "Dwight Rush."

He has played in drama, farce and musical comedy. He supported Forbes Robertson in repertoire, played the lead in "The Country Girl" in New York, and made a tour of the country in the leading role in "Seven Keys to Baldpate." For two seasons he was leading man with Margaret Illington in "Within the Law" and when that actress appeared at the Harris theatre in New York in Henry Arthur Jones's piece, "The Lie," Mr. Elliott was again leading man in that play during its season's run on Broadway. In musical comedy he played prominent parts in "The Arcadians," "The Quaker Girl," and "The Pink Lady."

In pictures Mr. Elliott has been equally active. He has played opposite many stellar lights of the celluloid firmament. Recently he played the lead with Ethel Barrymore in "The Kiss of Hate," with Irene Fenwick in "Children of Destiny," with Alice Brady in "Miss Petticoats," with Marguerite Snow in "Gallagher," and was featured with Irene Hawley in "Life's Shadows."

The picturization of "Mrs. Balfame" does not mark Mr. Elliott's initial appearance as leading man for Nance O'Neil, as he recently appeared with Miss O'Neil in "Greed."

Three Stage Hits for Essanay Subjects

THREE of the greatest stage hits of recent years—Cohan & Harris productions—will be produced by Essanay. President George K. Spoor has purchased the motion picture rights to these dramatic attractions and work of production will commence soon after January 1.

These plays are: "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," "Young America" and "On Trial."

The first named was one of the most popular types of romantic plays ever staged. It enjoyed phenomenal runs in New York, Chicago and on the road. Douglas Fairbanks was the star. It deals with the adventures of a daring young American in a mythical kingdom. He reforms the entire system of monarchy and puts it on an American basis, naturally wedding the princess.

"Young America" was the intensely human story built around a boy's love for a dog which came out to make an instantaneous hit last season. It has the appeal required by film followers and is certain to make an ideal photoplay, in the belief of Essanay officials. The play was written by Fred Ballard.

Few dramatic offerings of the past decade have met with the success of "On Trial." This deep, appealing play won crowded houses wherever staged. Its success in New York and Chicago was notable in the history of the American theatre.

James K. Young, one of the best known directors of the industry, has been obtained to produce these features, each of which will be designed for a screen time of approximately one hour and twenty minutes. Mr. Young's career on the stage and in pictures has given him an excellent record, with many strong Vitagraph, World and Lasky features to his credit. His work has included the filming of the greatest work of America's best known playwrights.

No cast for any of the three productions has yet been announced by Essanay, but work on the first will begin early in January. In each the leading stars of the Chicago company will be seen, promises George K. Spoor. These plays will be put on with careful regard for detail and with every possible expenditure. Good backgrounds, both exterior and interior, will be obtained regardless of cost. Coupled with the assurance of excellent production, Mr. Spoor believes the success with which these plays have been met by thousands of theatre-goers will make them certain hits in photoplay form, and features that possess an extraordinary advertising value to the exhibitor.

New Studio at Berkeley, Cal.

The Italia-America Film Studio, located at1500 San Pablo avenue, Berkeley, Cal., is ready for business, having fitted up a plant at an estimated cost of $35,000. H. E. Wallace, director-general of the concern, announces that work will be commenced at an early date on a feature production. Moving pictures were produced in this city several years ago, but of late nothing has been done along this line.

Cooper Signs with Apollo

Bigelow Cooper, late of the Daniel Frohman, A. H. Woods and Charles Dillingham forces, and more recently identified with important picture productions, has been signed by Apollo Pictures, Inc., to support Alma Hanlon, the star of Apollo's initial offering: "God of Little Children," by Harry Chandlee.

Mr. Cooper is best known to picture-goers by his convincing work in "The Wrong Woman," "On the Stroke of Twelve," "Killed Against Orders," and others.

Vitagraph Gets "Captain Barnacle" Series

The famous "Captain Barnacle" series of stories have been purchased by Greater Vitagraph and a big photoplay will be made therefrom. Bobby Connelly will be featured, with "Bill" Shea cast for the role of the old sea dog.

Build Town for Last "Patria" Episode

Mrs. Vernon Castle and her supporting company are now in southern California hard at work filming the last five episodes of "Patria," the International's great patriotic photoplay. To provide a proper setting for the concluding scenes of this serial, an entire town has been built on the old Universal ranch near Los Angeles. It includes streets, stores, houses, adobe huts and everything that goes to make a typical Mexican town of the interior. An immense stage has also been constructed with all the accessories necessary for making complete and artistic pictures.

The number of people required for these concluding scenes of the great spectacle runs well up into the thousands. Nearly one hundred actors have been engaged, including riders and aviators, and besides these there are troops of cowboys, an aggregation of Indians, a company of cow-girls, cavalry, infantry, and artillery, Japanese soldiers, and a great number of Mexicans, who will participate in border raids, attacks and counter-attacks culminating in a battle royal in which nearly three thousand men will be employed.

Jacques Jaccard, the well-known director, will be in charge of this small army. In the land of never failing sunlight and under the direction of Mr. Jaccard, the work of filming "Patria" will be finished in ample time for New Year's Day, the date of release by the International.

In the company supporting Mrs. Castle and now with her in California are Milton Sills, Warner Oland, R. W. Stewart.

Vitagraph will Film "Mary Jane's Pa"

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton has approved the purchase by Greater Vitagraph of the famous old stage play, "Mary Jane's Pa," by Edith Ellis, in which Henry E. Dixey was so long and successfully starred. Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott will be featured in the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E production of this vehicle.

Linder Comedy from Essanay After New Year

The year 1917 will mark the introduction of European film comedy to America, for in January Max Linder, the famous French funny man, will have completed his first picture with Essanay. Monsieur Linder has filmed nearly half of his first offering on his huge Essanay contract and hopes to complete scenes shortly after January 1. He is directing his own productions.

The European scheme of production forms an interesting contrast with American methods. Max assembles his picture as he goes along, subtitles and all. When he completes two or three sets he utilizes any studio delay to cut and trim his scenes. Thus it is soon possible for him to have complete continuity in several one, two and three hundred foot strips. When he has photographed his last scene he merely has to insert it in the proper space and his picture is complete.

In his thoroughness there is much for Americans to copy. He will not take a scene in a set until he has given it a thorough inspection, until he is certain that every detail has been worked out to its greatest advantage. His sets are some of the most complete ever constructed in the film industry. Every one is a "solid," no canvas enters into their construction. For instance, it took a week to build one small set. Max finished his scene in it in two hours. Preparation is his by-word.

His first comedy deals with his trip to America. Ernest Maupain, the well known character actor at Essanay, is playing with him in this production. Out of the myriad of beautiful blondes Max has finally selected a leading woman who is playing with him in the first comedy.

Morosco Is Putting "Wax Model" Into Solid Form

"The Wax Model," starring Vivian Martin, now nearing its completion at the Morosco-Pallas studios, was written by G. Vere Tyler, and published as a novelette in "The Smart Set" some months ago.

Miss Martin is cast as Julie Davenant, a French artist model.

As soon as completed a private showing of the picture will be arranged for the author of the story and the staff of "The Smart Set. George Jean Nathan, one of the editors, will express an opinion on the dramatic qualities of the picture.

Flatbush Welcomes Mary

When the Flatbush theatre, located in the Bedford section of Brooklyn, New York, exhibited the recent Vitagraph feature, "The Last Man," which had as its star Mary Anderson, the entire district turned out to welcome its popular favorite. Miss Anderson is a Flatbush girl and many of her intimates, which included players of the Vitagraph Company, reserved the entire orchestra of the house on the first night of the picture's run.

The showing was heralded by a slide reading "The Darling of Flatbush" and while the crowd was applauding this a flashlight was taken from the stage.

One Picture a Month from Artcraft

WITH the conclusion of 1916 not far off, the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, through its president, Walter E. Greene, announces that beginning with the new year it will inaugurate a policy of one production a month. The initial production, released on January 8, will be Mary Pickford's second Artcraft subject, "The Pride of the Clan," produced by Maurice Tourneur. This is to be followed in February by the first George M. Cohan offering, "Broadway Jones."

In connection with his company's plans for the coming year, Mr. Greene said: "Plans for the increase of our output to the extent of one production each month commencing with the new year, are now well under way. Although we are still young it has not taken us long to realize that Artcraft standards and policies will have material effect upon the motion picture industry during the coming year. The, fact that this has already been firmly established results in our plans for the enlargement of our scope and ideals.

"Artcraft intends to make the coming year one that will attract and hold the attention of all exhibitors. Having shown that we know what the exhibitors want we are going to continue and enlarge our policies. The best is always the most profitable and the best selling.

"With this in constant view and always confident of our plan, we intend to present this year more real things and more big things than have ever before been distributed by one concern. In fact, we are going to have for exhibitors a novelty, and a surprise novelty, every month of the coming year, this is saying a great deal but knowing our plans and what we expect to do we are ready to back the assertion.

"So with unfaltering belief we are coming forward with the greatest of stars of the motion picture and the theatrical world. Our new plans will result in the presentation of Mary Pickford in the best and biggest productions in which she has ever been seen; each succeeding one will outrival its predecessor.

"The George M. Cohan and other Artcraft subjects will present bigger and better pictures tending to advance the art of the screen. In the handling of all of these productions Artcraft will maintain the method of distribution built on experience, far-sightedness and with equity to all concerned."

"Rainbow" Shines in Clear Film Sky for Sherrill

Aside from the fact that it is a picturization of one of Broadway's biggest hits, William L. Sherrill's production of "The Rainbow" will have for its principals players who have been starred on other programs. Dorothy Bernard has been a star on the legitimate stage, having played the leading parts in a number of Belasco's productions. She has also for several seasons been the leading woman in Belasco's stock company in Washington, one of the most notable repertory companies in the country. Miss Bernard has also been starred in many of William Fox's photoplays.

Robert Conness, who plays the part in the picture that Henry Miller created in the original stage production, is starred in the current Paramount release, "The Heart of Philip Strong." He is also one of the star cast of the Frohman Amustment Corporation's picturization of "The Witching Hour." Mr. Conness has also been featured on Broadway in legitimate productions, having been one of the Frohman players for a number of years.

Jack Sherrill has been featured on both the World and Pathe programs.

The rest of the cast in "The Rainbow" is in keeping with the high calibre of the leading characters. Ralph Dean, the director, cast his players to conform to type.

Artcraft's January Release Will Be Mary Pickford in "The Pride of the Clan"

"The Innocence of Lizette" from Mutual December 25

MARY MILES MINTER, of Mutual, will appear in a five-part production entitled "The Innocence of Lizette," the week of December 25. It is from the pen of Bessie Boniel, was scenarioized by Arthur H. Gooden, and filmed at the American Mutual studios under the direction of Miss Minter's director, James Kirkwood.

"The Innocence of Lizette" is another great screen success to the credit of Mary Miles and is replete with delicately handled situations. The story of this newest production is decidedly novel. Miss Minter portrays the character of a little girl, of careful rearing, who is taken from the poorer districts into the home of a millionaire.

On Monday, December 25, Ethel Grandin, starring in a two-reel drama entitled "Indiscretion," will be offered.

"Tours Around the World," embracing beauty and historic spots the world over, will be shown Tuesday, December 26.

On Wednesday, December 27, "Mutual Weekly," showing all of the interesting news events of the week in one reel, and "See America First," a scenic, on the same reel with "Kartoon Komics," drawn by Harry Palmer, will be released.

A one-reel comedy, entitled "Peter's Perfect Photoplay," featuring Bud Ross, is scheduled for Thursday, December 28.

Alexander Clark, who is now starring in the stage production of "Princess Pat," is scheduled to appear on Saturday, December 30, in a one-reel Mutual Star comedy, the title of which is "Grimsey the Bell Hop." The story of this comedy tells of one Grimsey, a tall, lanky, awkward and equally homely bell hop, who answers the bells in a small hotel. The original "Uncle Tom's Cabin" troupe comes to town and Grimsey falls in love with Little Eva. She receives word that her mother is dying and is going to see her, when the manager of the troupe demands that she give him all of her money. Grimsey overhears all this and hides in one of the trunks. Arrived at the station, the bell hop jumps out and confronts the manager with a pistol. He gives Eva the money for her ticket and she kisses him just before she leaves on the train. The rest of the troupe leave the town via the railroad ties.

"Jealous Jolts," a two-reel Vogue comedy featuring Ben Turpin and Paddy McGuire, is scheduled to be released on Sunday, December 31, together with "Reel Life," the reel magazine.

"The Jade Necklace," the first of the stories of "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters," written by Edith Sessions Tupper and produced by the Niagara Film Studios, will be offered on Thursday, December 28.

These stories will be released in two reels, every week, for fifteen weeks.

Last "Vampire" Episodes

THE New Year will see Gaumont well on its way with the "Vampires." Episode 7 will be released on January 4, under the title of "The Master of Thunder." There will be but two more episodes. Henri Leubas and Tiny Tim, who will be recalled as the precocious child of Gaumont releases a year or so ago have parts.

The "See America First" of January 3, No. 69, shows Pasadena, California, and "Miss Catnip Goes to the Movies," a pen and ink comedy by Harry Palmer.

The day after New Year will be marked by "Tours Around the World," No. 9, showing Rio Janeiro, Brazil; Luchon in the French Pyrenees and some mountain views from the French railway.

"Reel Life," No. 35 for December 31, gives the spectator an insight into the olive industry of California, where there are two trees to every three inhabitants. The process of stuffing olives by hand is given prominence in this reel. "The Value of Venom" gives close-ups of the snake catchers of Brazil, and "A Most Unique Basket" is an armadillo shell put to unusual uses. Other things shown besides the usual modish coiffure construction, are labelled "Things Not Generally Known" and in one instance, how to open a glass stoppered bottle.

Push "Patria" Publicity Plans

The International has perfected arrangements for the campaign of publicity, in behalf of "Patria." The production has already been enormously advertised, but with the release date definitely fixed for January 1, the real campaign is now beginning.

On the Sunday preceding the release, all of the Hearst newspapers will carry a number of pages concerning "Patria" and its marvels as a screen production. Before the campaign is closed, announcements will appear in Cosmopolitan, in Hearst's Magazine, Harper's Bazar, Good Housekeeping, Motor and Motor Boating.

Five Well-Known Playwrights Will Write for Goldwyn

ARTHUR HOPKINS is credited with possessing a psychic sense in the little known art of discovering genuine sensations-to-be, and he is now guiding the literary destinies of the new Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

As indicative of his success so far, Margaret Mayo has taken the desk labelled head of scenario department for Goldwyn. She intends to create a literary organization which will include famous names as well as individuals whose writings are popular with the great American multitude.

Irvin S. Cobb is preparing a multiple reel story for the firm. Avery Hopwood, Bayard Veiller and Roi Cooper Megrue will also contribute themes. Miss Mayo, who wrote "Twin Beds," "Polly of the Circus," and "Baby Mine," has two new dramas ready for the Goldwyn stars, and Edgar Selwyn is injecting his knowledge of stagecraft into the company already.

Director Taylor Joins Fox

William D. Taylor, the director, will start on his first picture for the Fox company at once. He will have for his star Dustin Farnum.

Mr. Taylor started his stage career at the age of nineteen, when he appeared with Charles Hawtrey in "The Private Secretary."

His first picture experience was with Thomas H. Ince, after which he went with the Vitagraph company as leading man. He played the title part in "Captain Alvarez" as well as other roles.

He went to the Balboa company to direct and quickly made his mark in this field of endeavor. He directed the "Diamond From the Sky" serial at the American company and then joined the Morosco-Pallas concerns and made pictures with Dustin Farnum, George Beban, Vivian Martin, Edna Goodrich and House Peters.

Some of his successes were "Pasquali" with George Beban, "The Parson of Panamint" with Dustin Farnum, and "Her Father's Son" with Vivian Martin.

Alice Brady to Write Business Talks to Girls

Over four hundred daily newspapers throughout the country will publish a series of business talks to young girls, by Alice Brady, the World Film star. The series will begin about January 10 and continue until May 1. They are being syndicated by Harry Reichenbach's Press Bureau.

IN THE STATE RIGHTS FIELD

What Individual Methods Accomplished in the Northwest

C. R. Coulter, a state rights buyer who books for the territory of Washington, Montana, Oregon and Idaho, has proved conclusively what results can be obtained by personal aggressiveness and individual methods.

Mr. Coulter booked the two features, "The Escape" and "Beating Back." In exploiting these productions he divorced them completely from program methods. By the use of typical "showman campaigns" he made the pictures successful.

Previously, he studied his territory exhaustively. He found that the sort of advertising that would appeal to the people in one town would not appeal to the people in another. Accordingly, in towns with a large religious element the advertising campaign and the lobby display was different than in towns where the religious element happened to be of no great importance.

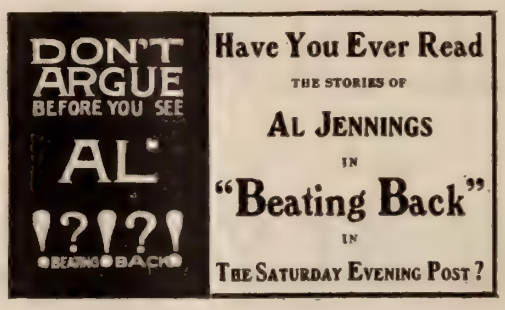
In booking the pictures in various parts of the four states, Mr. Coulter, from his investigations, exhibited them at that time of the year when the communities were most prosperous. For example, he played the apple districts in the fall, the lumbering districts in the spring, etc.

His chief aim was to solve each exhibitor's individual problems. When he arrived in various cities and towns his lobby displays and general advertising would definitely meet the exhibitors' requirements for filling the houses to capacity.

The point to be emphasized in Mr. Coulter's methods, aside from the fact that he followed the plan long ago adopted by successful showmen, is that his relation between exhibitor and exchange man is reversed. By his method the exchange man does everything in his power to bring money to the exhibitor; and the exhibitor does everything in his power to increase the returns of the exchange man.

While Mr. Coulter extracted an abnormal amount of money from the northwestern territory for the exhibitor, it should be understood that the results were not necessarily due to the subjects handled. Even if he doubled the usual income of that territory, it would hardly be justifiable for the producer to charge higher rates there than formerly.

Independent Exchanges and Open Market Synonymous



"I AM an ardent advocate of the independent exchange," remarked Harry A. Sherman, president of the Sherman-Elliott Company, on his return from a trip to the various state rights buyers of "The Crisis."

"The psychological moment has arrived for the exhibitor to get aboard the feature wagon through independent bookings of special features possessing unbounded drawing power. In speaking of features, I mean productions of more than average length, with a cast of high-class, well-known popular players adapted from some famous book by a well-known author or founded on a play that has passed the "and test" of intelligent and well-studied approval.

"The independent exchange is the thing. Mr. Exhibitor, lay your program with its uncertainty and its inability to maintain a high standard on the shelf. You have undoubtedly noticed the increasing number of stars that are breaking away from the program system and are being featured in photoplays of great length and quality. The open market is the exhibitors' salvation.

"From the box-office point of view, independent bookings mean long runs with capacity houses at advanced prices. The slow stream of nickels and dimes will be overwhelmed by an avalanche of higher priced admissions that more than balance the loss incurred by laying the program aside. This has been proven by my own experience with 'The Birth of a Nation' and 'Ramona,' the rights which I control for seventeen western states, and 'The Crisis.' I am following my own advice, for I am about to open in Chicago what will probably be the largest independent exchange in this country.

"Allow me to repeat, Mr. Exhibitor, the open market is the thing. Follow the fairest and most profitable way, and success is yours."

Mr. Coulter sent this card to exhibitors, and their curiosity was aroused.

Then he sent this one, and aroused it a little bit more.

Lesser Sells Denver Holdings, Including Rights to "Libertine" and "Purity"

Sol Lesser, president of the All-Star Features Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, has sold out his Denver holdings, including the Triumph Film Corporation's production, "The Libertine," and the Mutual's special production, "Purity," featuring Audrey Munson, for the states of Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Utah, to the Supreme Photoplays Corporation of Denver.

Mr. Lesser has made arrangements by which the Supreme Photoplays Corporation will handle all of the big independent features that he buys for this territory. As a result of this arrangement, Mr. Lesser will, in the future, include these four states in his state right feature purchases, making a total of twenty-four states.

Rights to "Nature" Film Sold in West

What is said to be one of the biggest business transactions on the Pacific Coast is a deal recently closed by Robert T. Kane with Del Clawson for the rights to a spectacular psychological drama "The Garden of Knowledge," staged in Los Angeles by a number of film men.

Robert T. Kane, upon learning that "The Garden of Knowledge" had been completed, started telegraphic negotiations from his New York office with Mr. Clawson, and they departed for the Pacific Coast, where he is now with H. L. Wallick engaged in arranging this new state right feature for immediate release. As soon as he completes some of his present plans, Kane will start back to New York.

Associated with him is H. L. Wallick, state right man, who recently exploited "The Unborn" in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast.

Moss Feature Ready

B. S. Moss announces that he has ready for release "The Girl Who Doesn't Know," described as a photoplay sermon for parents. In the leading role Marie Empress is very much at home in her characterization of "Zelma."

"The Girl Who Doesn't Know," is a picture that is daringly sensational at times and yet its extreme sensationalism is pardonable as it has a moral lesson that is apt to get all the mothers in town talking before many days. Miss Empress receives adequate support from Henry Grey and Robyn Adair. Some of the gowns introduced by Miss Empress represent a small fortune.

Trick photography plays an important part in the appeal of the film which is dotted with a bewildering succession of camera intricacies.

Midwest Concern Acquires "Civilization"

A new company known as the Mid-West "Civilization" Corporation was recently formed with offices at Denver, Colorado, for the purpose of acquiring the state right of the Thomas H. Ince picture, "Civilization," for the states of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Nebraka.

The president of the Mid-West Corporation is J. W. Burke, and the secretary and treasurer is Frank M. Mikels. The general manager is Max Schubach.

The first presentation of the spectacle in this territory will be at Denver, Colorado, on December 31, to be followed by offerings in Salt Lake City, Ogden, Omaha and Lincoln.

Women Endorse "Snow White"

Superintendent of Schools Graff of Omaha, Neb., and Mrs. Seiffert, president of the Woman's Club of that city, endorsed the picture "Snow White," following a special exhibition to the woman's and mothers' clubs of the city at the Sun theatre on December 7.

F. A. Van Husan, who has the state's rights to the picture, is securing the endorsement of bodies interested in the better pictures movement before releasing it over the state for special children's matinees. There is a big demand for this picture. Van Husan may follow it up with others. Sam Goldberg, manager of the Sun, booked the picture for Saturday, December 16.

Tri-State Ready in Detroit

The Tri-State Film Company, Detroit, controlling Michigan on Art Drama and Christie comedies, has opened for business at 120 Broadway. Art Blankmeyer, president and general manager, will shortly announce his Detroit manager.

Cincinnati Market Building

The Tri-State Film Exchange (Inc.), distributors for the States of Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky of the photoplay productions of Art Dramas (Inc.), and Christie Comedies announce the opening of their Cincinnati (Ohio) Exchange, at No. 23 Opera place. This exchange will supply the territory of Southern Ohio and the State of Kentucky.

The Cincinnati Tri-State Exchange will be operated under the management of Ralph E. Peckham, who is resigning his management of the Cincinnati Unicorn office, where he has been located for the past three months. Mr. Peckham, before coming to Cincinnati, was special representative for the Unicorn since its organization and prior to that time was one of the owners and operators of the Detroit Universal Company in Detroit and Toledo. During this latter period he was associated with A. W. Blankmeyer, of Detroit, with the Universal, and now resumes the same association with Mr. Blankmeyer with the Tri-State, that gentleman being general manager of the organization.

Activity on Pacific Coast

The California rights to "It May Be Your Daughter" have been purchased by Charles Klopot, who is now making arrangements for offering it to distributors through his exchange maintained in San Francisco and the branch in Los Angeles.

Marion Kohn, of the Consolidated Film Corporation, is now in Los Angeles to open a branch film exchange in a fine new building erected for its needs and those of other film interests.

The Artograph Motion Picture Company has established offices on the fifth floor of the Pacific Building, which is becoming quite a home for film concerns.

Pittsburgh Supreme Changes Name

Pittsburgh, Pa.

George C. Wilson, the financial power behind the Supreme Feature Film Service, was in Pittsburgh this week and visited the office of the company where a long consultation was held with Mr. Greele the manager.

The company is about to change its name from the present one, and will be known as Supreme Photoplay Productions. There will be no other changes in the company, all of its present officers being retained.

The name was changed as it was misleading. Having no regular release dates for their service and not being in the regular weekly program service, they decided that it was time the name of the company be changed so as to not conflict with other companies in the regular program business.

Frank L. Greenwald, of the Exclusive Photoplay Service, Inc., 212 Columbia Building, Cleveland, controlling the rights to "Race Suicide" in Ohio and Kentucky, has completed negotiations with Joseph W. Farnham, distributor of the subject, for the purchase of the Indiana territory. Mr. Greenwald reports a list of bookings in the new territory, which indicates a record equally as great as it has enjoyed in the Ohio and Kentucky territory. The Williamson-Waddington Pictures, Ltd., of Australia, has ordered a number of new prints for New Zealand and Australia.

Netter Discovers New York

The New York executive offices of the Masterpiece Film Attractions and the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., have been opened in 523-524 Longacre Building. Sol Lesser is President of All Star and with Leon D. Netter guides the destinies of the Masterpiece Attractions. The companies already are located in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Denver, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Chicago.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

ANTHONY PAUL KELLY, not yet twenty-five years old and earning by his pen in each twelve months an amount, it is said, in excess of the salary of the President of the United States, received twenty-five dollars for his first scenario, paid by the Vitagraph Company. This was back in 1911. A few more scenarios brought him more $25 checks and recognition from the Balboa Company, with which concern he virtually began his career. The first big picture to be adapted for the screen was taken from Jack London's "The Sea Wolf."

That was sufficient to cause the motion picture producers to make hurried bids for Kelly's services, and as a result Essanay secured him as scenario editor, where he remained for little more than a year. Once more creditable work gained attention, and an offer made by the Famous Players was accepted.

For the Famous Players he adapted "The Ring and the Man," "The Redemption of David Carson" and "The Butterfly."

AMONG the many successful adaptations by Anthony P. Kelly are "The Pit," "The Man of the Hour," "Samson," "The Thief," "Body and Soul," "When a Woman Loves," "What Happened at 22," "The Little Grey Lady," "The Face in the Moonlight," "The Bridge," "The Great Divide" and "The Builder of Bridges."

THE latest work of Anthony P. Kelly is the adaptation of Augustus Thomas' "The Witching Hour."

"THE LASH OF DESTINY" script called for a cabaret setting, with Gertrude McCoy, the star, working as a performer. George Terwilliger, the director of the production, desired a larger and more elaborate setting for these scenes than could be obtained in a studio. After considerable difficulty, he obtained permission from the management of the Ansonia Hotel to take the necessary scenes in the tea room of that hostelry.

A NUMBER of lights were set up in the room, carefully concealed behind banks of flowers and cameras placed so that they would not be seen by the diners. No mention was made to the guests of the picture that was to be made there, and the camera men caught all of the dancing and jollification. Needless to say, the action was more natural and unaffected than could possibly have been the case if a number of "extras" had been utilized. For one thing, the dancing that is to be seen at the Ansonia is usually about two months ahead of that to be seen in almost any other hotel, and the crowds there are among the best dressed in America.

WHILE at work in "Who Shall Cast the First Stone?" a forthcoming Vitagraph, Alice Joyce, who is co-starred in this drama with Harry Morey, rode a horse.

Director W. P. S. Earle on one occasion found himself looking past the camera toward a plunging animal that no amount of coercion on Miss Joyce's part could make behave. Then the horse bolted, galloping directly at the camera from about twenty feet distance.

NONE can tell how it was done, but Earle seemed to make one long jump forward, caught the horse by the bridle, and, as the animal plunged on past the camera, held tightly on to the reins. A few spectators applauded thinking it was part of the scene.

FREDERICK WARDE, Thanhouser star, demonstrated the heartlessness of a great city last week to the complete satisfaction of everyone connected with the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

In a part wherein as a dejected middle-aged man he is out seeking employment, Mr. Warde was "taken" by a cameraman in a taxicab in many different parts of New York City. The negative is a record that not the slightest attention was paid to the distracted man by the thousands that cruelly brushed by him.

"We were both pleased and disappointed," said Ernest Warde, who is directing his father in the picture. "For one thing, we won't have to cut out any of our good stuff because of bothersome crowds butting in, stopping and winking at the camera. But it is disheartening to know that a man acting out a most forlorn part, can move about our busiest streets without winning the slightest amount of sympathy."

THE Rolfe and Columbia studios are at their busiest, preparing new productions for the Metro program. John W. Noble already has begun the direction of Frances Nelson and her company in a new five-part feature written by George W. Gunn, called "The Power of Decision."

Prominent in Miss Nelson's support is John Davidson, who has been seen in many Metro plays, among them the screen version of "Romeo and Juliet," in which he played Paris, and "The Brand of Cowardice," starring Lionel Barrymore and Grace Valentine, in which Mr. Davidson was seen as the Mexican bandit, Navarete. Another well-known player is Fuller Mellish, who has had a long and distinguished career on the legitimate stage. Mr. Mellish has the part of an aged artist in "The Power of Decision."

IN her newest Artcraft picture, "The Pride of the Clan," Mary Pickford has the novelty of having her brother-in-law as a stage lover. In other words, the popular Matt Moore, brother of the equally popular Owen Moore, the husband of Mary Pickford, has this part to play.

MARIE DRESSLER and Johnny Hines were in an automobile collision in one of the scenes of "Tillie Wakes Up," for the World Film Corporation, which has just sold the remnants of the auto for $3. A junkman bought it with the remark that the price was exorbitant.

Selznick Pictures Present Robert Warwick in "The Argyle Case"

MR. AND MRS. SIDNEY DREW continue to produce the one-act Metro-Drew comedies. Among the productions in preparation, scheduled for early release, are "Reliable Henry" by Mrs. Charles Corbaley, "Her Obsession" by Mr. Drew himself and "The High Cost of Living" by Mrs. S. J. Moyer.

At the Mary Pickford studio over in Fort Lee, N. J., the plant is working at top speed on the final work on the forthcoming Artcraft release, "The Pride of the Clan," to be released January 8. The last scene has just been taken and the developing and printing department is now getting the film ready for presentation.

PREPARATIONS are now also being made for the production of the Mary Pickford subject, "A Poor Little Rich Girl" on which work will be commenced as soon as the script is ready. Several elaborate sets are being planned for the new production which will display scenes in the luxurious homes of wealthy metropolitan families. The cast is now being assembled and the players expect to start work on the new Artcraft release in the course of a week.

"Bobby" Connelly, young Vitagraph player, apparently has taken Douglas Fairbanks as his guide. Several times, during the filming of "The Grand Duke," a forthcoming Blue Ribbon Vitagraph V-L-S-E feature in which Master Connelly is co-starred with Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott, the little fellow tried some dare-devil stunts that would not have shamed even America's greatest acrobatic actor.

WHILE making his escape from a castle the little Grand Duke, the same being Master Connelly, climbed out of a window on the top floor, swung himself out on the vines which hung alongside, and then clambered part of the way down and dropped the rest.

In another scene he is supposed to be pursued by some troopers, and Bobby rode so fast that he outdistanced his pursuers entirely too much to suit Director John Robertson, with the result that the scene had to be taken several times before Bobby had learned that it was not a game of tag.

Agnes C. Johnston, authoress of many of Thanhouser's most successful plays, is enjoying a short vacation at Atlantic City. Miss Johnston wrote the series of "lovely child" comedy dramas for Gladys Hulette, including "Prudence, the Pirate," "The Shine Girl" and "'Her' New York" to be released January 7.

SOLDIERS along the border must be plastering their tents with photographs of their film favorites. The Thanhouser Film Corporation reports an unusual demand for autographed pictures of Florence La Badie, Gladys Hulette and Doris Grey from the troopers.

Lina Cavalieri and her husband, Lucien Muratore, the French tenor, were the guests of Max Linder at Essanay studios. The famous songsters are filling their engagement with the Chicago Grand Opera Company. They have long been friends of Essanay's celebrated screen comedian, having known him in Paris, where all three reside. While at the studios they viewed a private exhibition of a photodrama in which Mme. Cavalieri and Muratore appear. Later they inspected Max's private studio at the plant and watched him in the filming of several scenes in his first comedy for Essanay.

EVER eat a turkey raised in Shelby County, Alabama? They grew 'em so big down there, they eat an ear of corn at one gobble. At least that is what they say. Anyhow, Shelby County's leading citizens have gotten together and found the biggest turkey in the district which they are sending to Henry B. Walthall, Essanay star, for his Christmas dinner.

LIONEL BARRYMORE soon will begin a new five-part production directed by Eugene Nowland. A strong supporting cast is being engaged for this favorite Metro star, who has just completed the Metro-Rolfe five-part production, "The End of the Tour," a picturization of a story by Earle Williams in which Mr. Barrymore is surrounded by such players as Ethel Dayton, Mary Taylor, Maud Hill, Kate Blancke, J. Herbert Frank, Frank Currier, Hugh Jeffrey, Charles Eldridge and Louis Wolheim.

Ethel Dayton has been added to the cast of Ethel Barrymore's new production, which is to follow "The Awakening of Helena Richie."

By J. C. Jessen

Los Angeles, Dec. 12

Special to Motion Picture News.

AFTER weeks spent on the Sacramento River, north of San Francisco, Tod Browning, director; Wilfred Lucas, star and co-director, Olga Grey, little George Stone, Charles Lee, Winifred Westover, Sam deGrasse, James O'Shea, and Monte Blue, returned home last week, after making scenes for "Jim Bludso," Fine Arts subject. This photoplay is an adaptation based on the "Pike County ballads" by former secretary of state, John Hay. While on the northern California river the company had the use of two steamers, one of which was purchased outright and at the conclusion of a thrilling race burned and sank. Many levee scenes were made in San Francisco.

"THE LITTLE YANK," featuring Dorothy Gish, a civil war time tale, and "The House Built Upon Sands," with Lillian Gish and Roy Stuart, are being finished by directors George Seigman and Edward Morrissey, respectively.

BELIEVING a better characterization of the role taken by Lillian Gish in "The House Built Upon Sands," it was arranged this week to have a number of scenes made at the home of the Fine Art actress. A corps of electricians installed artificial lighting system in the Gish home, and the hundred thousand dollar bed-room suite rented for scenes in this production were used there. The antique is owned by General H. G. Otis, owner of the Los Angeles Times, and is known as the Madame DuBarry suite. It is of French desig nand was brought to this city by the millionaire publisher.

The entire Fine Arts studio is to be remade. Work was begun more than a week ago on the erection of a mammoth enclosed stage, and now Business Manager J. C. Epping gives out the statement that $50,000, are to be spent on improvements. The present enclosed stage will be converted into offices for the scenario department members, directors and heads of departments. A new paint shop, 30 by 50, scene dock 40 by 100 and other improvements are to be made.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, Director John Emerson and another Fine Art Company which has Alma Ruben playing the lead opposite Fairbanks, Spottiswoode Aitken, Lillian Langdon and others, have returned from two weeks spent at the San Diego Exposition grounds, the buildings of which served for the capital buildings of an imaginary South American government. Fairbanks takes the name role in "The Pet of Paragonia," an American youth who has many thrilling experiences in breaking up an every day bit of warfare. While at the Exposition city a day was set aside as "Douglas Fairbanks" day, and a number of special features were added to the daily program to make it attractive. This picture will be completed by the end of the week, and Fairbanks will then leave for the East where he will work in other subjects.

Director Paul Powell has in rehearsal at the Fine Arts studio, Constance Talmadge and a company in a photoplay temporarily titled "The Girl Homesteader." A. D. Sears will play opposite Miss Talmadge, and a cast of well-known Fine Art players will support.

LOCAL railroad offices have sold the Signal Company a half dozen box cars which are to be used this week for a big smash-up scene in the twelfth episode of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," which will have the chapter title "The Mainline Wreck." During the past week a placer mining camp was built in the bed of the Los Angeles River just back of the studio which would have done credit to the Sutter Creek country in the days of '49. The camp was complete in every detail, including a saloon and dive, tents, shacks, etc. In making of an interior scene in the saloon second floor, the building collapsed and three extra players were sent to the hospital. One had a dislocated shoulder, another a deep cut in the arm caused by a piece of falling glass, and the third it was feared would suffer from concussion of the brain. All three were back at work before the end of the week.

HELEN HOLMES has been ill for the past week suffering from a slight attack of pneumonia, and although not fully recovered she has been working in scenes for the past few days.

Signal Film Corporation subjects in the future will have release in Cuba and Mexico, arrangements having been made last week for the handling of these films through Luis Camer, an exchange man of Cuba, who also has purchased the Mexican rights. His agency will be located at Havana.

THE Anchor Film Company, whose producing force arrived in Los Angeles during the past week, is busy with the filming of their multiple reel feature

OUR BOW

Believing the fourth greatest industry of the nation can best flourish by intimate co-operation, and convinced that the poet was right when he said there is nothing new under the sun, this medium of transfusing information pertaining to the doings of leaders into the minds of others has been adopted.

The Hookum will serve to aid the plagiarists and thus benefit all. This making of shadow entertainments needs new blood and ideas, we appreciate, but at the same time we must retain all that have been accumulated.

The Hookum staff thinks Macaulay was right when he said: "Brevity is the soul of benefit." Therefore the size of the publication has been kept within the bounds of reason, especially with respect to the high cost of paper. What is lacking in size will be made up for by the far reaching influences for good.

Our motto has been selected from the choice sayings of our favorite poet: "A modest dog seldoms grows fat." So watch us grow.

Christmas Gift — we said it first.

HOOKUM

—David Horsley is having a trailer made for his autoped, which will make it more useful and serve to deliver film to the express company.

—Charley Chaplin has bought an automobile, even though the price of gasoline has jumped to twenty cents. A few thousand mean nothing to Charley when it comes to having a good time.

—Our town had a distinguished visitor this week, but there was no celebration, for no one knew he was coming or had been here until after he was gone. (Chamber of Commerce, please note.) Will R. Hearst was out and smoked a lot of Theodore Wharton's good cigars.

—A new corporation was formed at the barber shop Tuesday just after Ken McGaffey was there and had his hair cut. The firm will be capitalized like a film company, at fifty million, and will engage in the manufacture of crepe hair from sweepings at the barber shop. The supply secured Tuesday will keep the factory busy for some time.

—George Proctor has filed suit against one of our best citizens for fifty thousand; charge, plagiarism. It seems George was out at an entertainment where our b. c. told a story of a man that stuttered, and the scenario genius claims the speaker "is st-st-stealing my st-st-stuff."

—Al. Christie, for the first time in his life, regrets he is not an ingenue, for Al now has a big cold sore on his lip. "If I were an ingenue," Al told the editor, "I wouldn't be able to make up, and could then grab off a vacation."

—The sun came out so bright one day this week it took all the force of the Signal studio to prevent J. P. McGowan from rushing off to the barber shop to have his head shaved. He does this every spring.

—Addie and Charley Kessel and Charley Baumann pullmaned out from the other Broadway this week to o. o. the half million dollar studios of Thomas Harper Ince and the palatial home of Macklyn Sennett's Keystone comedies.

—Harry Davis, whom they call "H. O." is back at Universal City, after scampering along the seven-foot line in confabs with other chiefs at 1600 Broadway.

—A. Carlos has caused the dove of peace to skatter the olive branches on the doorsteps of Hollywood property owners' homes. The war against producing studios is over. Mr. Carlos settled it all by having the workmen leave one-inch cracks between the boards in the building of the ten-foot fence around the Fox studio lot. Every crack is working every minute during producing hours. As a studio builder Carlos is some plenipotentiary, or whatever you call them that brings about peace.

—Old Lady Rumor was again found to be false this week when Hank McRae was reported canned. He and the U bosses fixed it up even if he did take too much "Liberty."

—P. Hurst, Bill Brunton and T. Lingham have filed bill of expense with Signal Corp. for clothes worn out by packing and unpacking them. Filmin' is getting even more expensive because of the new kind of cut-back McGowan has introduced.

Society Notelette

G. DuBois Proctor and T. Garrity, Lasky scenario sculptors, were guests at a tea given by Mae Allison and H. Lockwood. The charming hostess says they dined like hungry actors who had been stranded for months. Good time was had by each (original expression).

Spec Woods is building a new barn 60 x 150 that will be the scene of several dances and maybe lovers' quarrels. It is going to have electric lights and everything. Folks said there wasn't room for another building on the place, but they left it to J. C. Epping and—well, he can get in most any place. Wark won't know home when he gets back.

"Hell Hath No Fury." Director Charles Bartlett is in charge of the filming and Grace Davison is the featured player. Most of the parts will be taken by Los Angeles players who have been engaged during the past week. The company has leased stage space and will work at the Signal studio.

OSCAR APFEL, pioneer Fox producer of the coast studios, who prior to that engagement was affiliated with the old Reliance Company in the East, Lasky and Pallas-Morosco, it was learned last week, has accepted an engagement with the Yorke Film Corporation, and will take up the first subject there the latter part of this month, or upon the completion of the present subject, "The Promise," directed by Jay Hunt.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, stars of "The Promise" will work under the direction of Mr. Apfel. General Manager Fred Balshofer has also engaged George Fisher to play in support of these stars. He has been cast for a good part in "The Promise." Negotiations are now being made for the staging of a football game in which the first and second teams of the University of Southern California will be matched. Lockwood will appear as the hero of the football game. To prevent any delay during the California rainy season the Yorke-Metro studio has been equipped with an artificial lighting system.

PLANS for the annual Pasadena Rose Tournament made known last week announce that Dorothy Phillips has been selected by the management as the herald to lead the big floral parade. It is probable she will also take the featured part in a photoplay laid about the tournament. The story for this was written last year and plans were made for the filming of the story by Joseph deGrasse, Universal director, but owing to continuous rain throughout the day, it was impossible to make the film. Miss Phillips is one of the best known of the Universal actresses, and has been on the coast for the past eight months playing in features made under the direction of deGrasse.

DIRECTOR William Worthington is making the final scenes for the five reel comedy melodrama "Face Value," which offers Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon in the principal parts.

A one reel comedy "What Physical Torture Did" is bringing bruises to the members of Director Allen Curtis' company, Ralph McComas, Milton Sims and Eileen Sedgwick.

RUTH CLIFFORD and Douglas Gerrard play the leads in the three reel photoplay Gerrard is now directing. It is titled "The Coming of Jessica."

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran with Edith Roberts and Fred Gamble are playing in the one reel Nestor, "Jealousy and a Key" being filmed by Director Louis Chaudet. This Nestor gives Moran an entirely new role of the comedy type.

EXTERIOR and interior settings with a Persian atmosphere are being built at Universal for a feature, "The Broken Bowl," which is to be made by Allen Holubar. The story was written by Grace Helen Bailey, staff author, who has been collecting data for more than three months.

Thomas H. Ince and William Eagle Shirt, His First Leading Man

DIRECTOR W. W. Beaudine and players of the Joker Company made a thousand people gasp in the downtown Los Angeles business district when he staged a leap for life scene in a Christmas comedy. William Franey in making a get-a-way with a stolen turkey, dives from the top of a ten story building to one of six stories. The people down below didn't see the net that caught Franey, and consequently thought him injured. But he came up smiling, and when he waved his hand to the crowd they dispersed.

William V. Mong, little Zoe Bech, and Harry Holden, the character actor, are working in a two reel Universal "Toto Interferes." Mong directs and plays the featured lead.

LEE HILL and Lois Wilson are the principals of the Universal program drama "To Him That Hath," written by Eugene B. Lewis, the scenario editor, now in production under the direction of Jack MacDermott.

Charles Swickard will next direct the picturization of a big story by J. G. Alexander. It will be in five reels, and Claire McDowell will play the featured part.

HERBERT RAWLINSON is again to be seen in a patriotic photoplay which will give him a part equally as stirring as the one he portrayed in "The Eagle's Wings." "Peace at Any Price" is the title selected by the author, Eugene B. Lewis, and Stuart Paton will be the director. Neva Gerber has been cast to play the leading feminine part.

"MARCEL'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT" is a five reel photoplay put into production this week at U City. The story was written by H. H. Durant and prepared for the screen by E. J. Clawson. This subject, like all others prepared by Clawson, will be filmed by Rupert Julian, who with Louise Lovely will play the important roles, with such supporting players as Emory Johnson and Elsie Jane Wilson.

ADDITIONAL one reel subject to the Mary Ann series, originated and produced by Ruth Stonehouse, are to be filmed at once. The directress-authoress-actress is now filming one with Mary as a philanthropist. The only other important part is taken by Lydia Titus, character woman. A number of the Universal child players appear in this plotoplay.

TO have been a resident of San Francisco during the earthquake and fire that laid the city low a few years ago is going to be quite a help to Director James W. Horne of Kalem. Horne is working on an episode of "The Girl From 'Frisco" that calls for an earthquake. It is reasonable to suppose that the effects he will secure will be remarkably realistic. His recollections are very vivid, and he will stage the interior scene, in which the room rocks and pictures fall, just as he saw it happen.

LETTERS have been received at practically every producing plant where children are employed asking for information concerning the care of the boys and girls. The information that has gone back was to the effect that in each instance schools are provided with a competent teacher selected by the Los Angeles county or city school authorities in charge. Education is compulsory with every one employed, and when the child is not in school, it is in the care of its mother or nurse. School continues four hours each day, and several of the studios have playgrounds and all furnish the children with speciai dressing rooms.

IN answer to a letter from Mrs. C. N. Greening, well-known sociological and child-welfare worker of Los Angeles, Marshall Stedman, director of employment at U City, wrote: "It has always been unexplainable to me why so much discussion and legislation should be gone into about theatrical children, and yet tiny newsboys and newsgirls and sweat-shop children are allowed to suffer and slave.

"The life of a theatrical child or moving picture child is as delightful and innocent as can possibly be imagined. Their little brains are trained to think right, their little lungs are filled with pure air, their little stomachs with good food, and their entire environment is one which might be envied by the children in the outside world."

ROBERT T. THORNBY, accompanied by Nigel Barrie, leading man, and Harry R. Haskin and Lloyd Brooks, assistants, arrived in Los Angeles last week for a short stay, during which scenes were taken for the adaptation of the Gouverneur Morris story, "When My Ship Comes In," for the International Film Service. Players will be selected here for the other parts required in the scenes. The company expects to remain on the Coast until in January.

DOCTOR H. G. STAFFORD, former scenario editor at Universal City, and Cameraman Gilbert Warrenton have returned from Honolulu, where they made a film for a Honolulu company, which has been titled in Hawaiian which, translated, means "Sent from Heaven."

thought that the F. I. L. M. Club was such an outrageous institution they had better go to law about it.

"The F. I. L. M. Club," said Mr. Buxbaum, "Is quite as much of a protection to the honest exhibitor as it is to the exchanges. The F. I. L. M. Club was formed to prevent the dishonest exhibitor from practising his methods. If an exhibitor cheats one exchange, he will cheat another; and we want to know about it. His dealings go on record with the F. I. L. M. Club, and his dishonest practices are stopped in short order.

"We extend credit from one to seven days. Usually our collections come in on Wednesday. Seventy per cent. of our collections are in by Wednesday. The exhibitor does a cash business. Why shouldn't he pay us in cash? If he doesn't pay by Saturday, we put the account into the hands of Charles B. Hoy. Mr. Hoy carried on investigations for the Chicago F. I. L. M. Club, and he recently established an office in Boston.

"The league's criticism of the F. I. L. M. Club is not justified. Only through such an organization can the exchanges prevent switching. As for our seven day collection limit, it seems to me that that is absolutely fair, especially when you consider that many feature companies are making their collections months in advance."

L. L. Levine, first vice-president of the Brooklyn local, in a letter addressed to W. A. Johnston, protests vigorously against the activities and the attitude of the F. I. L. M. Club.

Mr. Levine's letter follows in part:

"This organization, as is commonly known, was formed to promote a personal friendship among film exchange managers, and form a better relationship between the exchanges and between exchanges and exhibitors.

"It has been publicly stated by various members of the 'F.I.L.M. CLUB' that they are not members of this 'F.I.L.M. CLUB' as exchange managers, but only personally, and any acts of the 'F.I.L.M. CLUB' are not binding upon the respective exchanges.

"The very men, who are the general heads of these exchanges appear to be in ignorance of this 'F.I.L.M. CLUB' and do not recognize it as a means of arbitration or to subdue an exhibitor, BUT still, this 'F.I.L.M. CLUB' goes on making overtures to the various exhibitors' leagues for conferences tending to a settlement of differences.

"It has become known that an agency in New York, known the 'HOY COLLECTION AGENCY' is now in existence as a clearing house for the settlement of accounts in dispute with exhibitors. The very importance of such work demands a more authoritative means of settlement. This 'HOY AGENCY' has been designated by this 'F.I.L.M. CLUB' as its official clearing house. Is it the official representative of exchanges? Now, if the various heads of the distributing agencies do not recognize the 'F.I.L.M. CLUB,' how are they going to recognize the acts of arbitration, if any, of this agency; and last but not least, if this agency is supported primarily by the exchanges, is it psychologically able to arbitrate the questions?"

Famous Team of Turner and Trimble Back

Brief Tale of the Roaming Accomplishments of Larry and "The Vitagraph Girl"—to Say Nothing of Jean

FLORENCE TURNER, whose likeness in colors goes to NEWS readers this week as a supplementary insert, has the distinction apart from her qualities as an actress, of being the first woman to be given publicity as a screen star; also one of the first women to have her name associated with a corporation for producing moving pictures.

Events crowd so quickly on each other these days that the public are apt to forget the fact that ten years ago a thousand-foot picture was booked upon as a dangerous experiment.

For that reason the "Doyenne" of the screen—a title which on the face of it suggests stately white-haired old age—is still a young woman with the best years of her life still a long way ahead of her.

Starting her screen career long before most misses are out of the school teacher's charge, Miss Turner had the good sense to forsee that what looked like a very small affair at that time had every chance of growing into a colossal industry, so she attached herself to the Vitagraph Company and for ten years the "Vitagraph Girl" was screened in every kind of a picture then made.

Then the public—its curiosity excited—began to ask who the "Vitagraph Girl" might be, and the "Vitagraph Girl" lost her identity as such and blossomed out into Florence Turner, the first screen star. In course of time there arrived, via Texas and Mexico, the dynamic personality of Larry Trimble, from Maine, and with him came the dog "Jean" whose intelligence soon gained for her the position of the first canine star. From directing the dog in somebody else's picture was but a step to being a director on his own, and very soon Larry Trimble was directing for the first "Vitagraph" star—Florence Turner.

Presently Miss Turner, who had long been wanting to widen her experiences took counsel with her director and together in a business partnership they sailed for England.

In those days, as now, the English Vaudeville, or Variety Houses as they are sometimes called, had a rooted objection to any kind of "turn" which would make for variety or be in any way new, and at first Miss Turner's suggestion that she should appear on the vaudeville stage was received with considerable doubt. However, after much consideration two of the West End London halls aggreed to bill Miss Turner for a week, at the same time openly expressing their doubts as to the wisdom of the scheme.

Heading the bill with such well-known stars as Wilkie Bard and Harry Tate, and, in fact, sandwiched between those two performers, the reception given to the "photoplayer" was such as to leave no room for doubt. Fifteen minutes was the time allotted to Miss Turner for her "stunt," but full twenty-seven had elapsed before the London audience, roused out of its customary stolid apathy, would consent to listen to the next "turn."

As a result Miss Turner was invited by the Moss and Stull circuit—the equivalent of the Keith circuit in this country—to make a thirty-weeks' engagement to head the bill in their theatres.

The arrangement was completed in such fashion as to leave convenient intervals during which Miss Turner could get on with picture production, and the reception in each city of the British Isles was a triumph. The local theatre managers, who were always in doubt as to the wisdom of the engagement on the Monday night, had never any room for doubt after that, for each night following resulted in business and an enthusiastic reception for Miss Turner.

During the intervals between her theatrical engagements Miss Turner in cooperation with her side partner Larry Trimble, steadily produced the kind of pictures that has brought her the fame she so well deserves. So two years rolled by and in 1915, owing to the illness of her co-star, Henry Edwards, Miss Turner found herself with several weeks of what might legitimately have been used for much-needed rest. But Miss Turner is not the "resting" kind. So arrangements were made for her to appear at the various picture theatres of the principal cities of the British Isles.

In all, some 250 theatres were visited and Miss Turner appeared before and addressed more than three-quarters of a million people.

In each theatre she held a reception after the performance and there sold photographs of herself and other "movie stars" for the benefit of the Red Cross Society, incidentally realizing more than $40,000 by these sales, every cent if which was handed to the Red Cross for the benefit of the wounded.

On the recovery of Henry Edwards Miss Turner completed another picture, and then, as war conditions were making production almost impossible in England—actors were called to the colors, actresses grabbed for munitions work—Miss Turner and her partners came to the conclusion that a return to the United States was advisable. With many regrets, therefore, Miss Turner and Larry Trimble sailed again for the land of their birth.

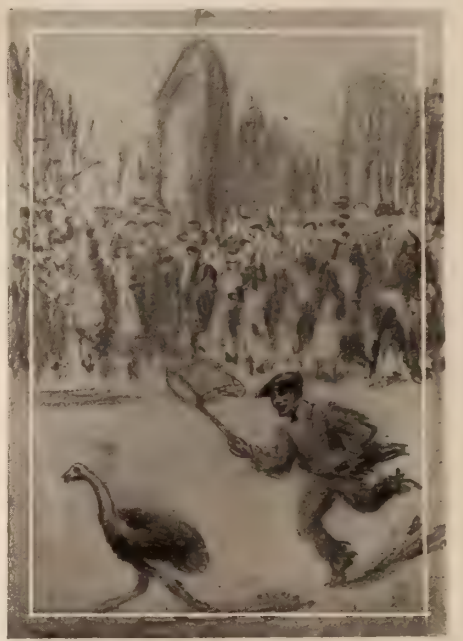
Now a career of uninterrupted success is not always the best thing for the human head; it is apt to increase in diameter until a larger sized hat is urgently necessary, but Florence Turner remains the same, simple, unaffected soul that she was in the early Vitagraph days. Her appearance is so well known to the public that it needs no description here. Not a few of the public, American and British, has good reason to know that her looks do not belie her—that no case of distress has ever appealed to her in vain, for the list of her kindly actions would fill a book. An artist to her finger tips—just watch those expressive hands of hers the next time you see her in a picture. Florence Turner has the retiring, modest disposition which goes with all genius; success has not spoiled her and never will. May she have many years of it.

JUST FOR FUN

THE Christmas season is upon us with a vengeance. When we got back from our shopping the other day, we found on our desk a wheeze from J. C. Jessen about the "return of five days" line on an envelope, a list of Eddie Lincoln's dogs, submitted by John Henry Goldfrap and a story about a blind man cheating and going in to see a picture show.

COMMUNICATIONS on the ostrich and the egg are piling up fast. Kate Price and Babe Hardy uniting their forces sat on an egg of the species down in Jacksonville recently. If it hadn't been bald it would have possessed full grown whiskers according to the twain who are only now recovering from the effects. According to Kate the soldiers in the trenches revel, by comparison, in the sweetest of perfumes when a gas bomb bursts.

AN exhibitor up in Siwash county, Oregon, writes in that he has a live ostrich which he will be glad to sell on a states rights basis to exchanges handling "The Plow Girl." He is now in a position to accept territorial bids. He will retain the original copy of the bird himself and furnish prints to all buyers, these same to be accompanied by one (1) egg per each. Our correspondent doesn't guarantee the eternal youth of the egg, but pens a P. S. to the effect that each one will be unhatched on its delivery.



ANOTHER reader takes exception to our statement that the ostrich is now inclined to elude the exhibitor. He offers as proof that ostriches possess so little sense that any one with a little persistence can easily catch one and substantiates his statement by the following poem of Carolyn Wells:

The ostrich is a foolish bird,
It has a feeble mind,
It often runs so very fast
It leaves itself behind.
And then it has to stand around
From morning until night
Without a single thing to do
Until it comes in sight.

Providing the reader is not overconvulsed at that which has gone before let him peruse.

WHEN you know that you can do it, and you have the nerve to try, and the grit to stick right to it, and all obstacles defy; when you've confidence behind you, and determination too, then success is bound to find you; fortune's bound to smile on you. When no thought of failure presses, and on laziness you frown; when misfortune and distresses cannot keep your courage down; when you smile at every fetter, and all barriers can buck, then the "world" will like you better for your fortitude and pluck. Just because an actor has made good in a bad-man-who-reforms part, just because another has scored successfully in a role in which he fights alone against twenty and wins, just because an actress has been appreciated as a wild girl of the mountains, or as a homeless street waif, is there just cause for putting him or her out in such roles until audiences get to know them by heart? We appreciate the fact that if a certain picture containing a certain star player in a certain advantageous part has made money for the producer, the natural desire is to present the same player again in the same sort of part. But it strikes us that this is merely another case of "killing the goose that lays the golden egg." Variety is the spice of life, and it also puts the spice in the theatre's bill. There are two players who we can call to mind at the present writing who are presented in role after role of the same sort merely because they made a success in it at first. If these same two are listed with the cast-offs a year or so hence, the reason for their downfalls will be quite obvious.

A CANVASS of the various Metro studios in an endeavor to discover the New Year's ambitions of all the company's stars reveals a wide variance in desires. Francis Bushman wants stories similar in artistic good fortune to "Romeo and Juliet," Beverly Bayne wants more stories that will give her the chances she had in "Romeo and Juliet," Ethel Barrymore hopes for more good stories, Viola Dana wants more plays suited to her and her work, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew want to discover a mine of comedy authors, Frances Nelson would like to get good stories, Mabel Taliaferro desires good stories, Lionel Barrymore wants more stories as pleasing and effective as those he had in 1916, Emmy Wehlen is on the hunt for stories such as her friends most enjoy seeing her in, May Allison is on the lookout for more stories like "Pidgin Island," Harold Lockwood wants stories that will keep him in the great outdoors, and Maxwell Karger wants stories, stories and still more stories.

PETE SCHMID having exhausted himself of stories concerning the crab and duck has now turned to the camel. The members were clad in straw garments, and the camel got hungry, and then—(the rest of this story was not passed by the National Board). In Pete's own words, "Abdul crabbed the act," and he thus brings the crab to the fore once more.

Clubwomen See "Seventeen"

The last annual luncheon and reception of the Athene Club held at the Waldorf-Astoria was devoted to the discussion of motion pictures.

Louise Huff was invited as guest of honor. Jane Stannard Johnson was a third speaker on the general subject of photoplays.

Owing to the illness of Mr. Turnbull, Robert E. McAlarney, former city editor of the New York Tribune and a member of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario forces, appeared in his place, making an address in which he pointed out to his audience that the majority of motion picture producers are making serious and conscientious efforts to give the public an increasingly higher type of photoplay.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Denham Palmer Is in Charge of Vitagraph, Omaha

To the Omaha, Neb. list of exchange managers has been added Denham Palmer, who is in charge of the Vitagraph exchange, just opening at 1111 Farnam street, in that city. Mr. Palmer is a World veteran, the Omaha exchange being his first as a Vitagraph manager. He was never an exhibitor, but his association with exhibitors has been close. The Omaha Vitagraph exchange in starting takes from the Kansas City exchange the block of exhibitors in Iowa and Nebraska, who have been using the service. Mr. Palmer, who is in charge, went to Omaha from Denver.

The Vitagraph releases in the new Omaha territory began Monday, December 4. Two road men were out even before the rugs in the new exchange's office were laid. Mr. Palmer was accompanied by Ben A. Braasch of Kansas City, expert booker; R. L. White, salesman, and Oscar Hanson, shipping clerk. The other employes are Omahans.

Well-Known Schlank to Minneapolis

Izzie Schlank, brother of President Ike Schlank of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation is now doing the booking at the Minneapolis exchange of that concern. Manager Hewitt states that Mr. Schlank possesses an unusual acquaintance among the exhibitors of the Northwest. His personal attention to each and every account has resulted in cementing a friendly feeling, which has had the result of big business.

W. C. Gookin, who has had much experience in Canada introducing the Vitagraph film service there, is now in Kansas City in charge of the Vitagraph exchange.

Canadian Censors Harsh

Leon F. Beck with United in 'Frisco

A. Beck, who entered the employ of the United Film Service about four months ago, has been appointed manager of the San Francisco branch. The serial, "The Yellow Menace," has been booked unusually well throughout this territory, where the question of Oriental immigration is a leading one.

Interstate Is Second Des Moines Exchange in Six Weeks

THE second exchange to open headquarters in Des Moines in the past six weeks is the Interstate Film Corporation, recently incorporated for $50,000. This company contemplates handling the Mutt and Jeff comedies, and some good feature in Iowa and Nebraska. Abe Frankel, proprietor of the Garden theatre in Minneapolis and of the Casino in Des Moines, is business manager of the new company.

Associated with Mr. Frankel are Ira B. Thomas, W. C. Eddy and J. W. Jeffries. Mr. Eddy is an active worker among the exhibitors of the State, and for the last two sessions of the Iowa exhibitors had charge of the fight against censorship. Mr. Jeffries will act as office manager. Shipping rooms and the office are located at Seventh and Mulberry.

Charles Stevenson, of the publicity department of the Laemmle Film Service, was forced to go to his home in Kansas City for a two weeks' lay-off under the care of a physician. He will probably be back at his desk by the first of the year.

A recent visitor to the Metro Exchange in Des Moines was S. G. Sladdin, general representative of the Consolidated Film Corporation. Mr. Sladdin, who has been touring the United States in the interests of "The Crimson Stain Mystery" was making his second visit to Des Moines in three weeks. Great receptions are being given this serial, according to Mr. Sladdin, and it is being booked in great shape.

A new traveler with the Pathe office in Des Moines is Herbert G. Billings, formerly assistant booker with the Universal office. Mr. Billings worked his way up to his present position from the place of assistant shipper. He will travel in Southeastern Iowa. His position at the Universal office goes to Charles Diehl, formerly shipping clerk. His position will be filled by John Wright Schnack, night booker and shipper. This place will, in turn, be given to Slater O'Hare, who was connected with the office previously.

Stanley Mayer, traveler for the Paramount in Iowa, and Assistant Manager Coleman, of the Des Moines Film and Supply Company, recently took a flying trip to Kansas City.

L. A. Sheridan, manager of the Pathe office, is exceptionally enthusiastic regarding the new Pathe serial, "Pearl of the Army," but not any more so than is Harry Hiersteiner, Des Moines serial man for the Mutual. Mr. Hiersteiner boosts "A Lass of the Lumberlands," while Mr. Sheridan, when not talking of "Pearl," is constantly telling of the virtues of "The Shielding Shadow."

Fred Wickerhorst, head of the poster department of the Des Moines Universal office, recently resigned to go to Davenport. Mr. Wickerhorst has been with the Laemmle Film Service for several years, previously being connected with the Davenport office of this company. He will take a two weeks' rest and then begin work in another line. Harold Bowlby, an assistant in the shipping department, has been given Mr. Wickerhorst's position.

Rhoads and Hoffman Join World in Atlanta

J. L. Marentette, manager of the Atlanta, Ga., branch of the World Film Company has added Charles R. Rhoads, formerly traveling representative of the World, Washington, D. C., office and George Hoffman, formerly traveling representative of the General Film Company to his sales force.

Mr. Marentette reports that business is increasing daily and that there is a great demand for the World-Brady made pictures.

Actor Selling Fox Films

Frank A. Brown, who formerly covered the southern section for the Metro Film Service of Washington, but who more recently handled State right films, has returned to Washington as a member of the sales force of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Brown is well known in this territory and is one of the most popular men in the sections he has covered. He succeeds Thomas Hildebrand, who is now managing the Strand Theatre, in Baltimore, and who for several weeks was a traveling representative of the Washington office of the Fox Film Corporation. For the past five years Mr. Hildebrand has been an assistant director and actor for the Fox company, but was recently injured in making a photoplay. He has also been a director for the World Film Corporation, an assistant director of Francis X. Bushman, and has supported and directed Theda Bara.

Lynn Is in Charge of Publicity for Progressive

J. V. Lynn, a well-known figure in the motion picture industry in the western part of the country, who has grown up with the business, has been appointed the publicity and advertising manager of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, of Seattle, Washington, distributors in that district of Paramount Pictures.

When the Famous Players first began making feature subjects, nearly four years ago, Mr. Lynn opened and operated the Grand theatre at Everett, Washington. He foresaw the great possibilities of the book-length films with stars of acknowledged reputation, and he was the first exhibitor in the Northwest to sign a contract for Famous Players, Lasky and Morosco, then being released as Progressive Service, one each week.

He later took over the Princess and Star theatres of Everett, and operated them in conjunction with the Grand. His interest in Everett was sold about a year ago, from which time he has been acting as manager and publicity agent for the People's Amusement Company, Paramount's first run exhibitors in Portland, Ore.

Mr. Lynn has always been a firm believer in extensive advertising, particularly newspaper advertising, and his slogan has always been "Don't advertise unless the picture justifies it. Get the show first, then advertise." And this, is the reason he always showed Paramount Pictures.

Omaha Has Film Row

E. H. Brocker, for three years chief booker with the Mutual in Omaha, has gone to the newly established International exchange in Omaha as chief booker and assistant manager at an increased salary. Fred Solomon, Brocker's working partner at the Mutual, has joined the staff of the General Film Company in Omaha. Fritz Bierman, four years with the Mutual in the shipping department, has joined the staff of the International. The Mutual and International are next door to each other on Harney street, which, with the World just a half a block up the street, promises some day to be Omaha's Film row.

Manager Moss of the International is rapidly completing the exchange rooms, and is adding an exhibitor's rest room—something new for Omaha. Writing desks, a library table with its ever present MOTION PICTURE NEWS and other motion picture literature, telegraph blanks and other writing material, all free to the visiting exhibitor.

Mr. Moss is delighted, he says, with the reception given International pictures in Omaha's territory. The first releases, several weeks ago, were hailed with many contracts, he says. Three road men are constantly meeting people, declares Mr. Moss, who says they are delighted that International pictures have come into the territory. Mr. Moss, with his progressive ideas and his attractive personality, is making many personal friends among the film men and exhibitors of Omaha.

"V" Deliveries from Omaha Cut Express Charges

Letters by the score tell how glad exhibitors in Iowa and Nebraska are to welcome the Vitagraph Exchange to Omaha, says Denham Palmer, manager. Many exhibitors, he says, took the Vitagraph releases from Kansas City, but the express charges were so excessive it made the price almost prohibitive, because of the long haul. Oscar Strine, of Boone, Ia., went to Omaha to meet Mr. Palmer and express his pleasure over the new arrangement. With Omaha as a shipping centre, Manager Palmer can make deliveries to his farthest point in Iowa or Nebraska within eight hours. The remodeling of the new exchange is rapidly nearing completion. A projection room where exhibitors will be invited to view releases is being built.

"Bluebird" Uses "News" Department Stunt

Manager Calvert, of the Bluebird Exchange in Omaha, copying after the exhibitor's department in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has launched a "Bluebird Bulletin" with a special feature of correspondence space. Exhibitors are invited to write letters to be published in the Bulletin, and they will be published, whether boosting or knocking Bluebirds. If an exhibitor found one advertising idea worth while in "putting a picture over," as Calvert expressed it, he will say so in the Bulletin, and give the idea there that his brother exhibitor might be helped—a department similar to the famed "Live Wire Exhibitor" department of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The Bulletin will be circulated among the exhibitors of the Omaha territory.

Johnson Is Assistant to Bachmeyer

P. K. Johnson, former manager of the Syracuse, N. Y., branch of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, of New York, distributors of Paramount Pictures in that section, has accepted a position as assistant to Manager W. C. Bachmeyer of the Paramount Cincinnati office.

Mr. Johnson is one of the best known men in the film industry and had a successful career as roadman for the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company.

Plan Film Building in Detroit

G. S. Trask, who recently resigned as manager of the Mutual exchange, Detroit, and who is promoting a new film exchange building there, says that most of the firms have signed for space, and that the contracts and leases only await the signatures of the head offices to assure the erection of the building.

The building proposed is ten stories high, and will be on East Elizabeth, near John R. The contracts call for completion of the building by June 1. AL. THORNBURG.

"Secret Kingdom" Shown to Exhibitors at Midnight

MANAGER F. F. HARTICH, of the Syracuse, N. Y., exchange of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, recently had a special midnight showing of "The Secret Kingdom," the new 15-episode adventure serial in which Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly are starred, for the benefit of Rochester exhibitors, at the Victoria theatre.

The episodes selected were those chosen by lot from the full fifteen. In addition, several chapters which had not been specifically called for also were screened. The first two episodes were well received, and many theatres are arranging to run them together as a six-reel feature, thus starting the serial off in a new and highly profitable manner. The other two-reel episodes then will follow weekly.

Mr. Hartich made a short address to those present, the attendance almost filling the house.

The showing began at 11 o'clock and lasted well into the morning hours. The audience of exhibitors seemed to like the innovation, as it did not take them from their business during necessary office hours.

Manager Hartich pursued the same methods in Buffalo later, at the Palace theatre, loaned for the occasion by Manager Mosher. The largest attendance that ever attended the private screening of a picture in Buffalo was present, Vitagraph reports.

G. F. Moves in Pittsburgh

The General Film Company in Pittsburgh, has moved into its new quarters on the third floor of the Seltzer Building at Twelfth street and Liberty avenue.

Manager Flarity of the General Film Company's offices states the moving was done in record time, and that it was finished a few hours after the start had been made. The company moved late Saturday evening, and the booking and other work of the office was not interfered with in any respect. G. L. MCCOY, JR.

"The Purple Mask"

(Universal Serial—Four Episodes—Two Reels Each)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Purple Mask," the new Universal serial, marks the return of Francis Ford and Grace Cunard to this program, from which they have been missing with the exception of a smaller picture now and then for the space of a number of months. This ought to be welcome news to the Universal exhibitor, for at one time or another the names of Ford and Cunard meant exceptional box office receipts. And considering past performances there is no reason why they should not mean the same today for "The Purple Mask" is founded on the same wildly melodramatic and pugilistic action as were their former releases.

The serial is being written and produced under the joint direction of Mr. Ford and Miss Cunard. As a consequence the former is given ample play for his boxing-ring tactics and for that matter so is the latter. Neither do they hesitate in awarding this feminine percentage of the dual combination plenty of opportunities to place on display her profile, her full face and in fact her entire figure. Before the first four episodes have flickered out she has appeared in black tights and has condescended to pose for an artist after the accepted fashion of motion picture models. These models are never known to be very strong for clothing.

No production that Francis Ford had a hand in would ever be complete without its various fistic encounters. On second thought fistic is the wrong word. A bottle is the accepted weapon. We wish particularly to call the reader's attention to the fight in the fourth episode. Something like a French Students' ball has been given vent to by the co-directors. The gay participants are in various weird costumes. The women run to abbreviated skirts, the men to anything at all. The enemy breaks down the doors and thereafter it is a bottle-smashing hors du combat waging for nearly a full reel. Thrills are as plentiful as the bottles. The Yale-Harvard football game never gave a bigger sensation.

Miss Cunard is introduced in the first episode as Patsy, a tom-boy. You know she is a tom-boy because she punches one of her gentlemen friends in the face. A well known and supposedly justly celebrated detective, Phil Kelly, snubs her and she resents it. She steals some of her aunt's jewels just for spite and dares Phil to find them. Before she knows what she is doing the jewels are stolen from her but undaunted she follows the thief to one of the low dives of Paris, steals them back again, and then sees that Phil has the honor of returning them to her aunt. This much is told in the first episode entitled "The Vanished Jewels."

Through the next three chapters, "Suspected," "The Capture" and "Facing Death," the combat between Patsy and Phil, continues with Patsy still fighting against the detective just for spite but also working deeds of charity as she goes along. At the end of the fourth episode poor Phil is just about slipping into a tank full of crocodiles while Patsy is hewing away at the ceiling above, intent on his rescue. In the matter of ending at a wildly exciting moment the fourth number has nothing on the other three. The exhibitor can sing "Bring Back My Audience to Me" with a light heart for they'll come again, once they are started.

The whole production is produced in a fashion that exhibitors well know. Realism is served a la Ford and Cunard. With its fights, its Paris sewers, its abbreviated feminine costumes and its action which is furious if not always progressive, "The Purple Mask" looms up as a big box-office attraction for those exhibitors who cater to Ford-Cunard fans and the admirers of their work.

"The Ninety and Nine"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

LUCILLE LEE STEWART and William Courtenay have attractive roles in this story of small town bigotry and casting your bread upon the waters moral. Ruth Blake is the village belle, and when she befriends the handsome stranger from the city, pleading with him against his black sheep ways, the jealousy of Buddy Bryson, a half-wit hand about the place, and the gossipy proclivities of some of the village maidens who have been unsuccessful in securing a man for themselves, combine to make the path of true love beset with obstacles.

Of course we know, when Ruth sings to him the powerful sacred song, "The Ninety and Nine," that this black sheep is coming back into the fold sooner or later, but it does not spoil the charm of the story, which is in its simple and straightforward unfolding of the regulation sympathy-compelling factors, the opposition of father, the shunning of Ruth by the village folk, and the harboring of the black sheep by Ruth against her father's expressed command.

Several strong scenes punctuate the rocky road to love. When Ruth refuses to attend the barn dance, and the half-wit reports to her father that the black sheep is trying to blacken his own home, and when Abner Blake rushing home finds the suspect has been concealed in Ruth's own room, his rage knows no bounds, and Ruth is ordered away. Then Tom follows, and we have a succession of powerful scenes, including the picturing of the murder which Tom has been falsely accused of, and finally, as the big thrill, the sudden sweeping over the town of a forest fire that threatens to consume the entire village with its thousand inhabi-firing the engine that brings the aid to the stricken populace just in the nick of time.

"The Ninety and Nine" is a well balanced story of pathos and thrills, and with the double star cast is sure to please all classes of audience. The religious touch is deep and sincere, but not over done A clean, wholesome, effective drama women and children will especially enjoy.

"Pearl of the Army"

(Pathe—Fifth Episode—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE is a distinct advantage in Pearl White. She is not afraid of being thrust from a taxi as it is going at high speed or of being thrown from a horse which has the Saint Vitus dance in its hind legs. In brief, she is not afraid of anything but in episode five of "Pearl of the Army" she is merely thrust from the taxi and thrown from the horse, which is about enough for the short space of two thousand feet.

In this number entitled "Somewhere in Grenada," there are other exciting moments besides those in which the gallant Pearl figures. Many of them are merely melodramatic and not physical. The entire episode teems with suspense and we unhesitatingly prescribe it for those who are hankering for a diet of sensations. Produced in the usual swift and straightforward manner, which is inseparable from all Pathe serials, this episode continues with a vengeance the breakneck pace set in the preceding chapters.

After an opening of several scenes showing America awakening to the need of preparedness the story shows the manner in which Pearl retrieves the stolen plans from the members of the Foreign Alliance. She returns them to her father. T. O. Adams, the mysterious gentleman who disappeared at the time of the death of Pearl's fiance, manages to steal them and replace them with worthless newspaper. Adams is engaged to act as the Colonel's orderly and accompanies a party headed by his master and Pearl to the Mexican border.

Knowing that Pearl now has the plans in her possession the leader of the Foreign Alliance orders an attack on the town with instructions to take the girl and Adams prisoners. This succeeds and the two are imprisoned in a secret chamber in the quarters of the enemy. A shot from an American cannon bursts the water tank on top of the prison room, and when the episode closes Pearl and Adams are in danger of drowning. Before the last scene disappears the mysterious Adams seizes the frightened girl in his arms and plants a kiss on her lips.

"The Traveling Salesman"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

FRANK McINTYRE and "The Traveling Salesman" are inseparably associated on the speaking stage, and now we have this well known comedy drama transferred to the silent screen. That it has lost much of the character which Mr. McIntyre's personality gave it when you could see him in the flesh, goes without saying. The trivial mannerisms that will set an audience into fits of laughter when enacted by a living character on the stage, where they can laugh both at and with him, usually fall flat when pictured. And so the cumulative force of a continuous rapid fire of bright lines and comical actions can not be had in the pictured comedy. Many humorous bits are registered in the first two reels of this play, but the real interest only begins when the serious dramatic theme is introduced and the matching of wits to see who will win the girl get well under way. From this point the complications of plot unreel, including a race against time to the court house to save the girl's inheritance from the clutches of the village skinflint.

To say that Mr. McIntyre and Doris Kenyon did not make a pleasing play of a plot that is certainly not burdened with excess weight, would not be doing justice to the stars, who carry an otherwise ordinary picture through five reels that will entertain but not cause any extra enthusiasm. This picture is up to the average of five-reel comedy dramas so far created, but not a picture that will pull extra dollars into the house except where those who know Frank McIntyre's fame come to see his debut in pictures.

It is, by the way, a Christmas picture, as those familiar with the story will know, the action happening on Christmas Day, when the traveling salesman gets carried by his regular stop and falls in love at first sight with the lady station agent at the small town beyond. Snow scenes abound. Excellent photography and a number of trick fade-ins as a means of conveying the thoughts of the actors, as for example in the poker game the vision of home and loved ones on the cards of each of the players, add very greatly to the enjoyableness of the play.

Two Triangle Pictures from Kay-Bee

("Truthful Tulliver"—Five Reels. "The Weaker Sex"—Five Reels.)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"TRUTHFUL TULLIVER" presents William S. Hart in the role of a fighting editor who locates in a lawless western town and reforms it by means of his guns, rather than his editorials. It is refreshing to see this star as a good man straight through from beginning to end. The climax is reached through a series of situations that are as thrilling as they are dramatic, and Truthful Tulliver sails through to victory minus any deep struggle with himself. In many pictures Mr. Hart has been centered in countless closeups registering all sorts of emotions while the good and the bad raged within him in wild tumult and as a consequence the spectator, if he was a Hart fan, knew just what was going to happen. And now thanks to J. G. Hawks, the author of "Truthful Tulliver," familiar traditions have been shattered. The picture is mute, but strong in its proof of that and goes to show that traditions deserve to be shattered occasionally.

The District Attorney's Son is Not Proof Against Temptation

On the other hand, the crude western town with its crudeness centered in York Cantrell's bar room and with its drunken brawls, furious gun play and accessory action is there to lend a vivid background to the story. Mr. Hart himself contributes several big thrills. For instance, when he rides into the saloon and lassoes his two enemies and drags them out up through the main street of the town, one experiences something of a big sensation. Again, when he leaps from the back of his horse to the rear platform of a speeding train he accomplishes a conventional feat of daring in excellent style.

Mr. Hawks' scenario is replete with action. There is no excess footage. Truthful Tulliver, besides cleaning up the town, indulges in romance. He has to fight for the girl all along and eventually just when things are beginning to look bright he believes her in love with another. Then comes the ride, the swing to the train and the capture of the man. Truthful takes him back to the girl and then comes the discovery that her anxiety was evinced for the sake of her sister.

Nina Byron, Walter Perry and Milton Ross do creditable work in parts of importance. About the best of Mr. Hart's pictures since, say, "The Patriot."

"The Weaker Sex" was written by a feminist, Alice C. Brown, and no doubt some will herald it as "teaching a great lesson," i. e., that in some specific cases of business woman has mere male beaten to a frazzle. This, however, can be overlooked in passing on the merits of the picture when its entertainment value is considered. It is a strong picture, unusually good until a court room scene that forms the finale is approached. Here the picture takes something of a slump, not because of the court room scene, but because the district attorney has undertaken to prosecute his son who is the very apple of his eye. To us this is most unconvincing and we believe everyone who sees it will wonder what froze the gentleman's blood so suddenly. Ties of relationship would surely have triumphed over a sense of duty in a case like this. The attorney's wife steps in to save the day and by a rapid-fire cross examination succeeds in breaking down the defense of the prosecution's star witness. There is no doubt left then in the spectator's mind as to which is the weaker sex.

The district attorney's son gets into all this trouble over a vampire, a role which offers Louise Glaum at her best. The vamp sets out to entrance the fellow so as to get some of his money, but instead she falls in love with him. This angers the vamp's associate in crime and he kills her and throws guilt on the son. The story is splendidly constructed over the greater portion of its length and even with its weakening finally, the ultimate impression made is one that leaves the spectator well satisfied.

Dorothy Dalton is the woman lawyer and plays her part exceedingly well, noticeably eclipsing all her recent performances in other roles. Charles Ray as the weakling son gives a fine characterization, while others are Robert McKim, Charles K. French, Margaret Thompson, J. Barney Sherry and Nona Thomas.

"Joy and the Dragon"

(Balboa-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WEBSTER did not define Joy as being synonymous with Baby Marie Osborne, but he never knew her. Otherwise he would have done so. "Joy and the Dragon" is the third picture featuring this little actress, and by the enthusiasm with which the former two were received, it is not stretching the point at all to assert that this one will be another record breaker. Marie is a child distinctly apart from the theatre and the studio. She is not an actress. She doesn't affect mature mannerisms and, thank heavens, those who are handling her do not picture her as falling in love with another juvenile. When Hal improvises a nightgown for her from the flour bag on which is printed "Guaranteed Pure and Wholesome" he just about describes the character of the picture. The bag guarantees it and so will we. Baby Osborne is a natural child who has at her command a series of wonderful expressions. She uses them to excellent effect.

"Joy and the Dragon" was written by Will M. Ritchey, and apart from giving the observer cause to be pleased over the actions of the child, he sustains the interest throughout by introducing a generous bit of villainy and several elaborate thrills. So if your patrons are inclined to shy at the thought of a child playing the featured lead, bring them in by dwelling on the fact that there is an explosion, a melodramatic twist to the plot which introduces a villain ever bent on taking the life of the hero, and which is responsible for a brace of sensational falls executed by two of the actors. But when they go away these things will not be uppermost in their minds. It will be Baby Marie Osborne first and they will come back to see her again.

The mere thread of the story concerns the manner in which little Joy succeeds in softening a hardened miner and restoring him a changed man to his father. On the side she is responsible for saving the miner's life twice and is the means of rounding up a band of crooks. But it is not the plot that counts; rather is it the opportunities that are given the star to play upon the sympathies of the audience.

Henry King plays the miner pleasingly, and it is he who directed the picture in such a satisfactory manner

"The Right to Be Happy"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY STEVE TALBOT

A PRETENTIOUS adaptation of Charles Dickens' classic of the holiday spirit, known everywhere as "A Christmas Carol." Scrooge is enacted by Rupert Julian, who has a considerable task in that he is repeatedly shown himself at different ages and under widely various circumstances and influences, by the ghostly visitors who seek to impress the lesson of charity upon him.

Old Scrooge is Cheered by His Ghostly Guide in the Bluebird Adaptation of Dickens's "Christmas Carol," Released as "The Right to Be Happy," on Christmas Day

The story of Scrooge the miser is too well known for repetition in describing the picturization, especially as the company directed by Mr. Julian to film E. J. Clawson's version, sticks faithfully to the theme. The only criticism that could be leveled at the production is that the players seemed too cold by far. They fairly reveled in mufflers and top-coats, while the California sunshine bathed everything in its rays. Too, the shrubbery in the exteriors showed green and plentiful, while the juvenile players rolled about on grassy knolls as Scrooge shook and shivered his way along the highway.

As Bob Cratchit, John Cook shone in the cast. Claire McDowell was his wife, and Frances Lee as Tiny Tim, was perfect. The others all played like genuine Dickens enthusiasts, especially Emory Johnson and Francelia Billington, as Scrooge's nephew and sweetheart respectively. Much fine photography and an air of Christmas homeliness pervades the whole production which cannot be too highly spoken of as an ideally wholesome photoplay from every angle. Some years ago the Edison Company cleaned up on their version of this story, in one reel, as a Christmas special release. It is highly probable that Bluebird will do the same this year with this five-reeler. Theatres with a semi-refined and well-read class of patrons can pack them in if it is made known that this is really "A Christmas Carol."

"A Double Fight"

(Signal-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

IN Chapter 9 of "A Lass of the Lumberlands" Helen Holmes indulged in some remarkably daring feats. In one scene she is shown to be deluged in tears over her mother's death, but this state of mind does not last long with the nettlesome Helen. Whenever there is trickery abroad—and it seems to permeate the air of the Lumberlands—this little girl is on the warpath.

A jump from an automobile into the baggage car of a fast moving train is the work of a second. This is what Helen performs with neat precision. After grabbing from a stowaway on a train the stolen records of her mother's marriage the dauntless girl, in order to retain her treasure, leaps from the train, over a bridge rail, into the river below. Holmes, the villain, is ruthless in his attempts to destroy all proofs of his marriage to Helen's mother. Dawson's fight with the two men engaged to steal the court records furnishes as much excitement as is ordinarily found in a picture.

Whoever has followed this series will eagerly await the next issue to see whether Holmes will succeed in this and his other bold schemes, with the fearless Helen opposing his every move.

"Just a Song at Twilight"

(Dixie Films—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

A BEAUTIFUL story of love and disappointment and consequent resort to drugs on the one hand, and on the other hand an elopement and a struggle for existence, and a misunderstanding as to the source of certain monies and the consequent ousting of a bank president by the man he once befriended are all portrayed in "Just a Song at Twilight" by Henry Albert Phillips. The film derives its title from the song of that name, because that was the favorite song of the unhappy girl's mother.

It is clearly photographed; the scenes are all remarkably reproduced and the picture carries with it a powerful example of the workings of conscience, even though that conscience had been allowed to slumber for years.

It is a picture that is sure to be well received by almost any audience and in using the word "almost" the quantity governed by the word will be hard to find.

The picture opens with a death scene in which a dying woman gives to her nephew an antique necklace and informs him that his father, whom he long thought dead, was in prison for manslaughter. The boy therefore decides to hunt for his father and in the course of his travels he secures a position as gardener and becomes enamored of his employer's daughter, to whom he presents the necklace in lieu of an engagement ring. The girl's father, Stephen Winter, recognizes the jewel as having been given to his wife many years ago by the man he persecuted and he discharges the youth. During a troubled sleep, however, Winter's conscience compels him to review his past life and reveals the fact that the man who gave the necklace to his wife had befriended them in their poverty and he (Winter) had wrought his downfall and subsequent conviction for the manslaughter, of which Winter knew him to be innocent.

Upon his discharge, the youth George Turner returns home and comes across a letter from his father accusing Stephen Winter of being the cause of all his troubles. The youth determines on revenge and returns to the Winter mansion, but anger gives way to pity and the old man, now thoroughly overcome by the dictates of his conscience, approaches the Governor of the State and secures the release from prison of George's father.

From "Just a Song at Twilight," by The Dixie Film Company

A happy, though somewhat sad reunion ensues and the two old men are reconciled, and decide to devote the wealth of the banker and the devotion of the ex-prisoner to the welfare of the young couple—the daughter of the former and the son of the latter.

Evelyn Greeley and Pedro de Cordoba are featured as Lucy Winter and Carlyle Turner, respectively.

"A False Clue"

(Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEW BY AGNES D. CAMP

THIS is an unusually good picture. The story is neatly told with no padding or obscurities. Although a mysterious death forms the basis of the plot there is no violence or anything gruesome. There is just sufficient mystery to stimulate the imagination and keep an audience on the qui vive for the climax.

The screen shows the body of Henry Ross, banker, on the floor of his library. The only clue to the mystery is a sheet of paper clutched in his hand. The story is told by a maid and a butler. Detective Lindsay hears the maid's evidence, which discloses a quarrel between her employer and a visitor. This is shown to be true as far as it goes. Her story causes the arrest of Robert Stanley, a favored suitor of Marjorie Ross, but not of Marjorie's father.

The arrest leads to the butler's confession. He has been a witness to Marjorie's secret wedding with Stanley. After writing to tell his wife, Marjorie old nurse, about the marriage the butler dropped a part of his letter in the library. Mr. Rose read it and was so shocked at his daughter's disobedience it brought on a fit from which he did not recover. Everything ends happily, as such a good little story deserves.

"King Lear"

(Thanhouser-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"KING Lear" is a hundred per cent. feature for the exhibitor who caters to a discriminating clientele. It is Shakespeare at its celluloid best; as good as it can be, deprived of the beautiful lines of the playwright. Frederick Warde, who appears as Lear gives a performance full of sympathy. His several big scenes are effective to the last degree. His work is not stagey and this despite the fact that he must needs use gestures in place of expressions, for his face is covered with a white beard. Mr. Warde understands the technique of the picture and this combined with his thorough understanding of the role results in satisfaction entirely complete.

In point of advertising value his performance is the dominating note of the picture. He has played Lear so many times that his name must of necessity be well known throughout the country. People will welcome this immortalization of his best known part. Ernest Warde as director has made a most pleasing production. The costuming and scenery is as good as it is in the most prominent Shakesperian presentations of the stage. By a judicious but not superfluous use of closeups he has emphasized the salient points of the play to such a strong extent that even those unacquainted with it will readily understand its most intricate situations. But these of course are not many.

Lear Mourns the Death of Cordelia

Shakespeare stripped of spoken lines is narrowed down to Shakespeare the plot-builder and nothing else. At building plots he was only fair. "Macbeth" in film form was a melodrama and not a tragedy. "King Lear" sometimes takes on a like aspect. It is the finish given it by the star, an understanding director and a competent cast that gets its more strained points over with conviction. Then, of course, there are the subtitles, practically every one of which is an excerpt from the play. Mr. Warde's acting is quite successful in making the spectator feel the meaning of the lines "How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child." Kindred speeches of a like nature reach the spectator nicely. These subtitles are excellently well placed.

The story in brief concerns the wandering of the ancient King Lear after he has foolishly placed his kingdom in the hands of his two eldest daughters. They take matters into their own hands and make known their attitude that they wish to be left alone. Heart-broken, the king takes refuge in a cave and finally his youngest daughter who has loved her father always, brings her armies to his rescue. They are defeated in battle and Lear and she are to be murdered. But the enemy's camp is thrown into confusion by the clashing of leaders. When these quarrels are straightened out the victor hastens to release Lear and his daughter, but already she has suffered death while the king, unable to stand this final loss, is completely overcome with grief.

The suspense in this plot is strong. We think it one of the best of Shakespeare's works to be brought to life on the screen. The plotting is thick; no ardent motion picture fan will complain of a lack of it. There are duels, and grewsome details that keep the suspense at a high mark throughout the duration of the five reels. And added to it all there is the sympathetic, pitiful character of the ancient king, shorn of support when most he needs it.

Ernest Warde plays the king's fool in good fashion. As the plotting sisters Ina Hummer and Edith Diestal do nicely. Hector Dion in a heavy role contributes one of the most polished pieces of acting of the supporting cast. Lorraine Huling, Wayne Arey, Charles Brooks, J. H. Gilmour, Boyd Marshall, Edwin Stanley and Robert Whittier are seen in the other principal roles.

"The Challenge"

(Astra-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AFTER seeing "The Challenge," you come away with the impression of having seen a big picture. Your mind is full of the winning fight the hero made against desperate odds. He did it in a big way and won your sympathy the minute he got up and made a speech in his club, deploring the fact that he, an accomplished engineer, was a mere automaton in the hands of his employer. When he was sent to jail through the trick of his enemy, the secretary of his company, you started in to hate the villain just in the very fashion the writer calculated you would.

But the most exciting part of all came when the hero, pardoned by the governor went west to put through an immense engineering project. There he met again his old enemy, had to fight every inch of the way to make good and win a girl besides. And a thrill was furnished you when you saw the hero rescue a worker who was hanging on the edge of a steep precipice—he might have fallen any moment. Perhaps his struggle to convince the tomboy girl of his honesty and combat the connivings of the villain was the best part of all. It certainly was handled nicely with a welcome appreciation of its comedy angle.

Besides its big story, "The Challenge" has everything else to its credit; the fellow who picks a flaw in it should be arrested for "taking the joy out of life." The direction was in charge of Donald McKenzie.

Charles Gotthold played the hero in a style that fascinated from the start. Montagu Love acted the villain with a conviction, a firmness of expression with which he always characterizes his parts. Helene Chadwick, a little slip of a girl, took the heroine's role and scored a decided success in it. She has never before appeared either on stage or screen, but she has personality, ability, vivaciousness and earnestness.

"The World Against Him"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE World Against Him" presents a story that is wildly improbable and in the second the production tendered it lacks the proper gradations of tempo. So the effect produced is never satisfactory. A better story might have overshadowed the poor production and vice versa. But as the picture is offered now it is full of glaring inconsistencies and aggravating scenes intended to be as powerful as they are weak.

Mark West, a prospector, comes to New York with his invalid sister and places her in charge of Doctors Welsh and Boyd. These gentlemen operate on her, knowing that their work will result in death. After the tragedy Mark discovers something of the dirty work and kills Dr. Boyd. He is arrested and sentenced to die. In the meantime Alice Ridgeway has learned that she must marry immediately or lose her fortune. Her fiance, Dr. Welsh is in Japan. So a kindly old judge arranged for her to marry Mark, believing he will be executed shortly afterwards. After the marriage Mark escapes. He goes west again and when Alice and Dr. Welsh arrive kidnaps them both. They seek refuge in a cabin and there are attacked by bandits. Dr. Welsh proves a coward and of course Mark is a hero and Alice begins to love him. When she learns that Dr. Welsh was a party to the ignoble operation, all her sympathies go out to her much abused husband.

It is rather trying to accept many of these situations as serious.

Dr. Welsh Proves a Coward

That the state would allow such a marriage, that the prisoner should escape so easily, that he should come out in the open and remain unapprehended, that the bandits should attack the cabin; none of these things convince. In addition the subtitling is very poor, probably because an attempt was made in the writing of them to cover up the loopholes in the story. It was written by A. B. Himes and produced by Frank Crane.

E. K. Lincoln and June Elvidge are the leads. In support appear John Sainpolis, Ruth Findlay, Fred Truesdell, Julia Stuart, Nicholas Dunaew and an Indian by the name of Scar Face.

"Charity"

(Powell-Mutual—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

LINDA GRIFFITH'S impersonation of a city orphan shows that the way of the friendless is hard and the grafters get along very comfortably. There is a line to the effect that the makers of the picture do not assert that every charitable institution is conducted as badly as the one shown on the screen, but that there are entirely too many that come under the description.

"Charity" is as full of orphans as a walnut is full of meat. The film shows clean orphans, dirty orphans—light, dark, pretty and ugly orphans, but they look like well-fed orphans; the majority appear plump as pigeons. Neglected they certainly are. The matron apparently has no ambition for her charges beyond turning out good washwomen. The boys run away as soon as they are old enough to know there is a world beyond the walls of the institution.

The picture gives a rap at birth control and the laws that prohibit its practice. The story that "Charity" deals with is in that strain. It is told by a young woman, who is being tried for the murder of her consumptive baby. While she is relating the incidents of her life other scenes follow the fortunes of her brother Jimmie, whom she has not seen since he ran away from the institution in which they were placed at their mother's death.

Jimmie has some very hard times, but he finds friends and is at last successful. He appears in court as the junior partner in the law firm that is defending his sister. She is acquitted and a touching reunion between the orphans follow. The court scene is poorly enacted. The jury do not adjourn before a verdict is found. Neither is it likely that a district attorney who fails to get a conviction admits to his opponent that he has been mistaken. That, however, is a very small defect; the purpose of the picture is too great to be made or marred by a trifle. Creighton Hale makes a very real and appealing Jimmie. Sheldon Lewis impersonates effectively the brutal father. Linda Griffith's good screen face enables her to tell a disagreeable story convincingly. On the whole the picture is good and instructive; there is nothing objectionable in it, nor anything that a good many children do not see at home.

"The Awakening of Helena Richie"

(Metro—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

MARGARET DELAND'S novel, from the press of Harper and Brothers, interpreted into pictures with Ethel Barrymore as the star, will be a box-office winner. But we would not want to go on record as saying, from a purely "motion picture" standpoint, if Miss Barrymore and the book were totally unknown, this Metro production would cause a furore.

The theme of the plot is simple—too simple in fact for our present standards of motion picture requirements. The elements are too elemental. The love of a child, not her own child, and the restoration of the child to her after she had been convinced that the child's own welfare demanded her to give him up, furnished the whole basis for the sympathy. And all the arts of the camera and of director, visible tears and close-ups of expression, fail to bring this up to the highest pitch of tension.

We do not wish to be misunderstood as judging this picture other than of the highest merit. The utmost possible is gotten out of the story by director, star, and in the main by the supporting cast. There is no important role outside of that of Helena and Little David (Maury Steuart). The kindly Doctor Lavendar, the unpleasant Lloyd Prior, the Wrights, son, father and grandfather, are the principals in the cast. Hassan Mussali, as the poet dreamer playwright, whose ideal was the woman who had voluntarily gone to live with the other man to await the death of her drunken husband, acted the part well. It is quite logical his suit is not acceptable to the older woman, and that he should commit suicide when his ideal was shattered.

The underlying motive of action is not clearly brought out. Lloyd Prior's pleading that Helena leave her husband is suggested. He is a poor type of villain, not bad enough for picture audiences.

"The Awakening of Helena Richie" will please, and as a careful delineation of a popular story will be a big box-office attraction. It measures up to a high average.

"The Love Thief"

(William Fox—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THIS film, directed by Richard Stanton and featuring Gretchen Hartman and Alan Hale, reflects creditably upon the trio, the last named for their absolutely correct delineation of the characters assigned to them, the Mexican Juanita of Gretchen Hartman being simply superb. Frances Burnham as Clare Nelson goes through a turmoil of doubt concerning the constancy of her lover and later through the valley of death by his side in Mexico, where they are shackled and bound and he (Alan Hale) is compelled to look on while his sweetheart is tortured and insulted. It's a beautiful picture and the photography is all that could be desired. All the scenes are laid on the Mexican border and are faithfully reproduced.

Alan Hale and Gretchen Hartman in Fox's "The Love Thief"

The theme is a virile one from the pen of N. P. Niessen and has not a single break in its continuity.

It tells the story of a Mexican and a women he calls his sister, who cross the border into the United States as refugees, although their real purpose is to purchase ammunition for the Mexican revolutionists and, of course, they have to obtain permission from Captain Arthur Boyce. He passes them and later when spending Independence Day with his sweetheart in sunny California he comes across the same pair—guests at the ball given by his fiancee's father.

Recognition ensues. He is snared into a téte-a-tête with Juanita, and is seen by Clare Nelson, who breaks off the engagement. Enraged, he calls on Juanita next day and denounces her. She laughs at his tribulations and again tries her wiles upon him. He throws her aside and leaves the hotel. In the meantime a murder has been committed in the hotel and the murdered woman has been clothed in Juanita dresses and passed off for Juanita.

Capt. Boyce is arraigned, found guilty and sentenced to death, but the real murderer, conscience stricken, acknowledges his guilt and Boyce is freed and reinstated in the army. Now things move apace. Juanita knows her doom is sealed should the facts become known—well, skirmishes ensue, a village is devastated and in the end Juanita is shot in the breast. Captain Boyce and Clare are united and the whole episode ends favorably to all who survive.

Others in the cast are Edwin Cecil as Costa, Willard Louis as William Nelson and Jack McDonald as Charles Rogers.

"The Fighting Chance"

(Mutual—Five Reels)

REVIEW BY AGNES D. CAMP

THIS is a good box-office picture, although watching Stephen Siward cure himself of an inherited drink habit is not as pleasant on the screen as it is in the pages of Robert Chambers' "The Fighting Chance." Admirers of this author's work will miss in the plain facts on the film the effects of the easy, graceful style in the story. The picture shows a young man who, making vow after vow never to drink again, seizes upon every excuse to break his word. The reform is a tedious process and demonstrates that something more than a promise is necessary to overcome hereditary weaknesses.

Although the drunken scenes are not pleasing they are very true to life. There is no doubt that the picture has more than a Fighting Chance of becoming as good a seller in film as it is in book form. E. R. Lincoln in the role of young Siward is natural and likable in an unpopular part. Violet Horner impersonates the patient Silvia, who encourages Stephen with her faith in his reform. It is unnecessary to dwell upon the plot of this widely read novel. The best advice is to see the picture and judge with a temperate mind an excellent version of an intemperate subject.

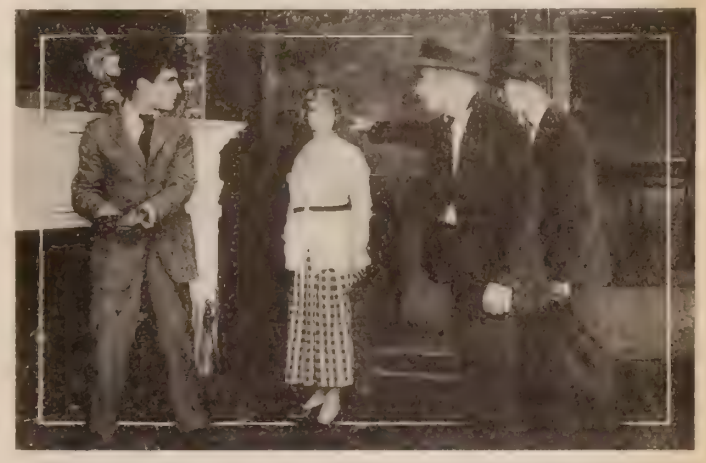
"Treed"

(Vogue-Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY AGNES D. CAMP

THIS picture starts off in quite a rough-and-tumble fashion. An old man with a hoary beard is knocked about in a manner that rather shocks our respect for the aged, but it soon settles down to really good comedy. There is a complicated courtship between two grocery clerks and the grocer's two daughters.

An eloping couple are turned back on the road by the police, who have been notified by the girl's father. The auto in which Rube and Lillian are escaping jumps from a high bank into the topmost branches of a large tree. Here they nest until the police and the grocer's family come up. A lively fight ensues.



For a while it looks as if they are going to win the fight, but the course of true love never did run smooth, and pretty soon an axe and a saw bring down the tree and the young people are caught with the money taken from the grocery store. The penalty is jail for Rube or marriage with the other daughter—Rube prefers jail. Lillian is less heroic—she marries Rube's rival. Lillian Hamilton and Florence Rosee are the grocer's daughters. Harry Huckins is the funny old man with the beard and Owen Evans is the successful clerk who wins Lillian. Rube Miller is the Rube of the story, but he does very lively work.

"The Shielding Shadow"

(Pathe—Fourteenth Episode—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS episode "Absolute Black" is next to the last in the serial but the thrills do not abate in the least. Sebastian and a policeman engage in a fight on a housetop which results in the fall of the latter to the ground. Again Sebastian is in a motor car directly in the path of an oncoming train and he only dashes away to miss it by the proverbial hair's breadth.

Leontine Has Destroyed the Code Book and the Pellets

In this chapter also comes a partial explanation of the mysterious disappearing power given to those in possession of the magic black mantle. This is covered with a solution of absolute black made from the black pellets.

While Ravengar is explaining this to Leontine the house is attacked by Sebastian and his followers. Ravengar holds them off and Leontine succeeds in burning both the valuable code book and the black pellets. The fact that Ravengar is Jerry with a false wig and moustache is also substantiated in this number but not fully proven—there must be a final chapter.

"The Rise of Susan"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

A VERY good story gives Miss Young an opportunity to be all she knows how to be to her audience in "The Rise of Susan." We were pleasantly surprised, in fact, at the substantial merit of the play—for the title suggested to us anything but what actually was presented—and with such a good play and Miss Young in the title role, the exhibitor cannot overbill this attraction. It will more than meet expectations. Susan "rises" through the strange fortune of being selected as a model in a fashionable shop, where she is employed in the work-room, to fill the place of a girl suddenly called to leave, and from there being employed by an unscrupulous "social climber" to impersonate a countess at one of her social functions. She succeeds so well in attracting people of wealth and refinement to her, that the daughter of her scheming hostess loses a fiancee to her. This causes much planning on the part of mother and daughter, as may be imagined, and the usual black villain is on hand to try to take advantage of his knowledge of the deception, but Susan stands by her guns and refuses to he bulldozed or cajoled into giving up her new-found love. When, with the wedding guests assembled, the villain threatens to expose her, she gives him no opportunity, but rushes out and makes a full confession herself publicly. This of course is a profound shock to the scheming woman who has shared the prestige of having a real countess in her salons, but she is equal to the emergency and declares Susan insane as the result of being a drug fiend. Susan of course does not know this, and breaking down is taken to a public hospital where she later conceives the idea of remaining as a nurse herself.

Susan Impersonates a Countess So Well She Is Made One for a Needed Occasion

Ninon it is whom Susan has deprived of the love of Clavering Gordon, and on Susan's disappearance the old love revives, and Ninon continues the awful curse of the drug habit which has been hers even from girlhood, even as the wife of Gordon whom she has married. Six years pass and Ninon, weakened by the drug, collapses in the streets one morning and is carried to the hospital where Susan is nurse. The inevitable scene ensues, and Ninon, insane with jealousy and the influence of the drug, picks up a pair of small scissors and stabs at Susan's eyes, blinding her and then leaping to her death from the window of the room, just as Gordon arrives. It is years later when the real love between Gordon and Susan is rekindled, and in spite of her infirmity, which the doctor says can be overcome by gentleness and kind treatment, the earlier happiness expected is taken up where it is left off through the base chicanery of the scheming mother.

Miss Young has several opportunities to meet tense situations during the action of the play, and on every occasion more than meets expectations. Her refusal to be blackmailed, and spontaneous confession were well planned climaxes which relieved a very tense situation, at just the right moment. Eugene O'Brien, as Clavering Gordon, failed to register as well as he might the unfaltering devotion the character undoubtedly called for and did not seem to be quite enough perturbed over the sudden interruption of his marriage. To be told the girl about to be his bride had gone insane from drug terror and almost immediately to become again obviously the target for his previous flame, seemed hardly natural, but these points will be overlooked by the audience for the several splendid moments of inspiration in the main plot as a whole. The picture is sure to make a hit. Its clean, good dramatic force is in fine contrast to the flood of problem plays.

"Marriage a la Carte"

(Clara Kimball Young Reissue—World—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THIS delightful comedy drama from the story, "Marrying Money," by Bertram Marburgh and W. Pezet, has been very cleverly titled for its presentation under the new name, "Marriage a La Carte." The novel idea is carried out of having each title in semi-cartoon style, illustrate the story, clearly and not in symbolic style, and the work has been done in such a manner as to distinctly help the picture along. For example, following the scene where Jim Sweeney puts the count out of commission by an application of several doses of pure rye, the title shows a row of whiskey glasses, eight or nine at an angle indicating their having been emptied, two or three still standing completing the row; a very graphic and well thoughtout aid to the continuity.

The story is a very natural and enjoyable one. Mildred Niles (Clara Kimball Young) is the daughter of a wealthy broker, who gets caught in a bad stock deal, after Mildred has met and had a case of love at first sight with Ted Vandeveer, a poor relative of the Archie Vandeveers. Ted is equally smitten with Mildred, and is egged on to propose marriage to the (supposed) wealthy girl by his chum Sweeney. Mildred's mother urges Mildred to accept at once and elope with the (supposed) wealthy scion of the Vandeveer millions, before her father's failure becomes known.

Both the lovers have qualms of conscience, but the one egged on by mother, and the other by his best friend, the elopement is carried out and the marriage takes place. Then, after each has confessed and they find they love one another just the same, a codicil to Ted's uncle's will is learned of, giving him a million dollars should he marry.

Clara Kimball Young as the lovable pampered girl is as charming as possible in a light role. E. M. Kimball plays the role of the ruined banker acceptably. The other parts are well cast, including Ina Brooks as Mildred's mother, Chester Barnett as Ted Vandeveer, Winthrop Chamberlain as Count Castellanini, and William Jefferson as Jim Sweeney.

"The Right Direction"

(Pallas-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THIS is undoubtedly one of the best pictures Pallas has yet produced, and way up in the ranks of good pictures which combine a sympathetic and clearly told story, with the special charm of a pleasing character well delineated.

As Polly Eccles, child of the slums who finds herself mothering "Billy Boy," her frail baby brother, at an age when she herself sadly needs a mother's care, Vivian Martin finds herself in a role completely adapted to her talent. The brief scenes in which the brute father causes the death of the mother, and himself suffers the penalty of his drunken irresponsibility, are realistic, perfectly handled, and not morbidly melodramatic. When Polly decides she will take little Billy and "go to California," the pathos is dominant over the comedy of the situation, and we at once accompany her on her seemingly impossible journey, wondering how the author is going to provide the way to make the story seem at all probable. There are no "obvious" situations in this plot. Several surprises are registered, out of the ordinary, in its unfolding. For instance, when the brute father sends Polly with the usual pail for beer, we are totally unprepared to find she has brought milk, instead, and we are naturally relieved, after seeing Little Billy consume a large portion of the liquid, to learn it was milk. Again when Kirk Drummond, on his way to California in his automobile, picks up the rambling party and says he will take them to California, we settle down thinking the plot is to be commonplace and just a series of impossible coincidences to an obvious end, when lo! He does the natural thing and drops Polly out in the country and we find the story hasn't really begun. Again, the author has Big Bill befriend Polly, and when we are certain her troubles are to end, Big Bill is separated by the clever business of having the car Bill is on sidetracked, while Polly is carried on to her destination. Then after Polly has arrived and we have forgotten about Big Bill, he again comes into the plot at a very necessary juncture and lends her comfort and assistance.

The main theme, and the final working out of the meeting of the lovers, furnishes the real thrills, the attempted blowing up of father's mill, and saving of the property and winning of father's respect and of course later consent to the necessary marriage of his petted son to the waif of the slums that was.

Colin Chase as Kirk Drummond, the son, and Herbert Standing as John Drummond, the father, with Alfred Hollingsworth as "Big Bill" and Baby Jack White as "Billy Boy," are the principals in a truly all star cast. For every part is handled to get the utmost possible out of it.

"Rags," Polly's Irish terrier companion, and "some dog," added much to the enjoyableness of a thoroughly pleasing play. As a relief from the sob stuff and the sex dramas of the present season "The Right Direction" is a more than welcome arrival. Incidentally, it means Pallas can give us plays with brains in the plot and direction appealing for themselves rather than the elaborate staging which has pulled through many past productions of this company that have not had the merit inherent in the play itself. We have already said Miss Martin has found herself in this play. Pity the scenes of actual mine interiors at Grass Valley were cut so short. They were great.

"The Foolish Virgin"

(Selznick-Young—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG may be depended upon to save a poor picture or add lustre to a good one. Her acting in "The Foolish Virgin," from the novel of Thomas Dixon, is characterized by its usual finish. She makes Mary Adams, a romantic school teacher, a very real person. Miss Young brings out the varying moods and shades of character called for by the role, with a sureness of touch expected from an actress of her reputation

The plot gets well under way before Miss Young appears on the screen, but her tardy entrance is a signal for a rapid development of the story. All the scenes leading up to her appearance, however, are necessary to the picture. They have been introduced to show the effect of environment on Jim Anthony, who afterwards marries Mary Adams, and these glimpses of his early life in a tenement district account for many of his actions.

The chances young women take who marry men without knowledge of their past history is the main idea of the story, and the telling points of the novel have been made effective on the film.

Mary Adams tries to forget everyday reality in highly colored romance. All her spare hours are spent in reading legendary tales, and she longs for a "Prince Charming" to relieve the monotony. In this susceptible frame of mind she falls easy prey to Jim Anthony, who through disappointment has become a criminal.

After their marriage he takes his bride to the home of his mother in the moonshine district of a southern state. So many years have elapsed since mother and son had seen each other, that she failed to recognize him. He intends to wait until morning before making known his identity. In the meantime, his mother, an ignorant, half-demented old woman, constantly under the influence of home-made "hundred proof," spies ten thousand dollars in his valise and at night attempts to murder him in a scene of melodramatic force.

She only wounds him and he recovers. His mother on learning that she had attempted the life of her own son, dies from the shock. Anthony and his wife remain apart for a number of years. On his return she finds that he has reformed and consents to a reunion.

Jim Anthony was played by Conway Tearle; Paul Capellani made a capable Doctor Mulford; Nance Anthony, a disagreeable role, was well acted by Catherine Proctor; Anthony's dissolute father, in the hands of William Welsh, became a vivid representation of a reprehensible type. Anthony at the age of eight was played by Sheridan Tansey with boyish energy. All the other parts were intelligently interpreted—Jane by Maire Lines; Ella Swanson by Agnes Mapes; Harden, the thieving patent lawyer, by Edward Elkas; and Dora by Jacqueline Morhange. Albert Capellani directed in his usual capable manner, and has made some of the scenes particularly striking.

The picture will please the majority of audiences—and wise exhibitors will book "The Foolish Virgin."

"A Child of Mystery"

(Red Feather-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE principals in "A Child of Mystery" are Italians. The girl dances on the city street while an old man cranks the organ. She is loved by a son of Italy who tends a corner fruit stand, but a villainous person higher up, the ward boss, has other plans in store for her. In reality the girl is the grandchild of a rich man whose daughter ran away and married an Italian count. And after a lot of trouble the girl is restored to her rightful home, marries a society man and then goes back to console the folks of her slumming days.

Willard Mack wrote this for Universal and there is a conventional fault to be found with his story. It is not big enough. The first two reels are perhaps the slowest. Much is pictured in them but nothing of consequence; the story has advanced nowhere in particular when the third reel commences. Hobart Henley produced the picture after an average fashion. The casting director, however, did not display keen judgment in the selection of types. Gertrude Selby, the mysterious child, is pretty and cute and all that, but unfortunately for her role her nose turns up. Some of the other players, including Thomas Jefferson and Alfred Allen, are in appearance remotely removed from the members of the Italian race.

Mr. Henley has the lead opposite Miss Selby as the fruit vendor and save for a few overacted scenes fares nicely. Miss

Curious Characterizations in the Red Feather Play, "A Child of Destiny"

Selby, who it will be remembered was formerly with L-Ko comedies, is not capable enough to make a strong impression. Her appeal is in her appearance.

"The Truant Soul"

(Essanay—K. E. S. E.—Screen Time Two Hours)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

IF you want a summary of this review in the first paragraph, here it is: this picture should be sure-fire in any house from a nickel tenderloin joint to the most fastidious neighborhood theatre in America.

Henry B. Walthall is too big to fit into an ordinary scenario. He needs a story of almost epic proportions to give him elbow-room for his artistry. "The Truant Soul" emphatically meets this requirement. Victor Rousseau was the author of the script. This is not the eighteenth century Rousseau of France, but a young American writer.

From the very start the plot maintains a tremendous tension. Just as the spectator believes that the dramaic pressure is lessening, a new thrill, bit of suspense, or surprise gives him a jolt.

Walthall plays the part of Dr. Lancaster, a great surgeon. This man, of normally noble instincts, possesses a despicable second nature. He is a drug addict, and when doped appears cruel, vindective, and unscrupulous. When in his normal condition he is able to perform great feats of surgery, and in other ways to do good. He is the absolute slave of Myers, his secretary.

One day Dr. Lancaster discharges Joan Wentworth, a hospital nurse, for a slight breach of discipline. The same day she goes to Lancaster's house to plead for reinstatement. He tells her to go to the Lancaster Hospital to help a man who is in a critical condition. She finds that the hospital is a farmhouse, and that the patient is Lancaster himself. When Joan starts to help him fight his craving for drugs, Myers arrives at the house. He intimidates Lancaster, but Joan refuses to give up. She stays with Lancaster night and day, enduring his crazed insults and frightful deliriums. Little by little she reduces the dose, and fighting against Myers at every turn, she finally rids his system of the poison. He then proposes to her and is accepted.

When she is sure of his recovery, she lets him go to a neighboring city to perform an operation. Two hours later he returns, raving drunk, escorted by Myers. Joan is prostrated, but resolves to fight for him again. He tries to rape her, but she is rescued by—Dr. Lancaster.

Then the secret is out; the cruel cynical Lancaster is the surgeon's half-brother and double. This man had debauched his brother, robbed him, and posed as him before the world, only letting the real Dr. Lancaster come out of his coma when delicate operations are to be performed.

Baffled, Myers sets fire to the house that night, but is caught in the flames himself. An insane woman whom the evil Lancaster had wronged shoots him, and avenger and victim are burned. Dr. Lancaster rescues Joan.

The drug fiend has been enacted numberless times on the stage and screen, but it is safe to say that nobody has ever given such a portrayal as Walthall does. In its stark, terrible realism it is a true classic. You forget its tingling horror, its revolting brutalism, in your fascinated watching of the man's struggle. Some critics may assert that these scenes are too protracted and too realistic to be relished.

When the evil Lancaster and the good Lancaster are together on the screen you don't even wonder how one man could create two characterizations so utterly different. You don't wonder simply because it does not occur to you at the time that the two characters are the same man. In the opinion of the writer this is the best screen work Walthall has done.

A perusal of the plot will show that the part of Joan could not be done by a flapper ingenue. It required the services of a real emotional actress of no mean ability. Mary Charleson is this and more.

Patrick Calhoun makes an admirable heavy. Others who impress are Anna Walthall, Mary Parkyn, and U. K. Haupt.

Harry Beaumont, the director, deserves credit for his share in the picture's success. He shows a keen sense of dramatic values, and by attention to every detail evolved a virile yet dignified whole.

The settings are fitting and the locations are beautiful. The photography is uniformly excellent, the double exposure work in Walthall's fight with himself being particularly remarkable.

"The Twinkler"

(American-Mutual Star Production—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

THE ordinary "thriller" film can be manufactured to order from a number of reliable formulae. The only fault of these machine-made spinetinglers is that they fail to thrill the intelligent fan. The devices employed to raise the hair are too transparent, the theatricalism too obvious.

"The Twinkler" is a rip-snorting melodrama that piles thrill on thrill most lavishly. The best part of it is that a rational adult can and will respond heartily to these nerve-stimulants. The methods used to create suspense are not wholly new, but they are most capably managed. The type of story (a crook play) always seems to get the public.

It is claimed that the plot was furnished by Sing Sing convict No. 65368. This probably accounts for the realism of the prison scenes, which occupy the lion's share of the five reels.

This release ought to add to William Russell's following. The star is provided with a congenial role which he handles excellently. Charlotte Burton plays opposite him. Many of the players in the support are particularly well cast.

The settings are adequate, and the photography very good.

Bob Stephany, a criminal "doing time," is engaged to Rose, daughter of an ex-convict, Daddy Burke. Rose makes Bob promise to reform when his sentence is served, and he keeps his promise. Corregan, a political boss, insults Rose, and Bob comes to her rescue. The next day Corregan has Bob arrested on a false charge, and again attempts to attack Rose. The girl, struggling in his arms, discharges a revolver. Her father, who is at the window, also shoots and his bullet kills the man.

Rose is charged with murder, and Bob resorts to stealing to fight for her freedom. She is convicted and sentenced to be electrocuted. Bob obtains a confession from Daddy, who is dying, and takes it to the governor. The governor sends his secretary to the prison with a pardon for Rose. Bob sees this emissary, and not knowing who he is, steals his wallet. He is horrified to find that he has stolen the pardon, and makes a desperate race for the prison. He arrives an hour after the time set for the execution, and asks for Rose's body. He finds her alive, however, for a friend had delayed the execution by throwing a file in the dynamo.

"Dancing with Folly"

(Second Episode of "Is Marriage Sacred?" Essanay—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

THE title "Is Marriage Sacred?" is one well calculated to bring big sums into the box-office. It arouses curiosity. One cannot help wondering, however, why this picture was released under that title, for if there is any connection, it is certainly vague.

As for the picture itself, it is a program short-length of some merit. The players are capable, the settings very good, and the photography fair. The story has been used often, but it has a good appeal.

The motivation was not well constructed. The cold, selfish husband suddenly becomes affectionate and self-sacrificing. The tender, domestic wife turns abruptly to wild parties and neglect.

The cast includes Marguerite Clayton, Sydney Ainsworth, Lillian Drew, Edward Arnold, and Thomas Commerford.

Inceville, Wonder City

BRIGHT and early on a crisp morning in the fall of 1915—to be exact, September 27—a squad of men alighted from a big automobile truck before a vast expanse of bare territory in the little town of Culver City, Cal., and shouldering a varied assortment of instruments, proceeded to "stake out" the property.

Six months later—or, on March 27—four hundred and eighty-nine men and women took possession of the premises and commenced to make motion picture plays thereon.

From a stubbled field of fifteen acres, unkempt and uninviting, the tract had been converted, during the passing of four moons, into what is now one of the wonder-spots of the West; the transformation had been that of a territorial "eyesore" into a magnificent photoplay-factory—the new and permanent home of Thomas H. Ince productions.

Many men and women—competent, each of them, to criticize—have inspected this mammoth organization in the period of nine months since it became the headquarters of Ince and his little army of employes, and all have pronounced it unequivocally to be the handsomest, evidently costliest and most efficiently-equipped institution of its kind in the industry. They have departed, marvelling at the beauty and stability of the structural work, the remarkable adaptability to year-round production, and the smoothness and celerity which characterize the achievements of the several departments.

Thomas H. Ince and Gov. Bamberger of Utah

Building activities, more than any other branch of the business, have marked the progress of the plant, since it first was occupied by the Ince players. There has been no increase in the number of persons on the payroll, or in the number of productions for release, but the plant is bigger by several buildings than it was in March. The last nail has been driven, the last trowelful of cement has been applied, and all that now remains to be done to make the plant complete is the grading of a few square rods of territory in the far corner of the premises.

This gigantic plant stands as a monument for the men who were in charge of its building and the untiring efforts of its head, Director General Thomas H. Ince. The planning fell to Business Manager E. H. Allen. Mr. Allen, being thoroughly familiar with every detail of producing work, gave the architects the elementary design. In laying out the grounds, he had the aid of Raymond B. West. Mr. West had a number of years' experience as cameraman, and mathematically laid out the stages so that each receives the maximum amount of sunlight with the minimum shadows.

The Milwaukee Building Company, from the rough plans furnished by Mr. Allen, designed and erected all buildings. They made a careful study of the needs for a motion picture producing company, and so well did they accomplish their task, they have since been awarded contracts for the erection of other producing plants. Their work here is an achievement of which they can be justly proud.

With but one or two exceptions, all of the building are of steel and re-inforced concrete or hollow tile construction, which makes them absolutely fireproof. Cement stucco in a cream white was used on practically all of the buildings which gives the plant a soft color tone pleasing to the eye, and advantageous from the standpoint of light effects.

From a standpoint of attractiveness, the administration building is, perhaps, the most notable structure on the "lot." This is two stories in height, measures 65 by 80 feet and is of the Italian Renaissance architecture. The main entrance leads into the reception foyer, which, in turn, opens into two halls, along each of which the executive and business offices are located. The upper portion of the building is devoted to the offices of the authorial staff and the stenographic department. Of particular beauty, in this structure, are the offices of Producer Ince and Business Manager E. H. Allen. Ince's quarters consist of a spacious office, finished elaborately in mahogany and a handsomely appointed loungingroom, with a beautiful marble bath-room attached. Allen's office is finished in quartered oak panels. All of the interior woodwork was furnished by the Southern California Hardwood and Manufacturing Co.

The largest building of the group is the wardrobe. This is three stories in height and measures 48 by 125 feet. The ground floor, in its entirety, is devoted to the storage of the great mass of costumes that have accumulated during the past few years, including hats, shoes, wigs, etc. The second floor is occupied by the staff of dressmakers constantly employed at the plant in the work of creating and remodeling feminine apparel. On the third floor are to be found the men's tailor shops, where a staff of expert designers and cutters is daily augmenting the supply of male attire.

Next to the wardrobe building is a little building, 25 by 25 feet, used as an emergency hospital. This contains cots, operating tables and complete "first-aid" outfits for the ready alleviation of possible injuries to employes.

Then follows the receiving depot. This is a structure measuring 48 by 50 feet and is designed for the invoicing of all goods delivered for any of the departments. Several times every day automobile trucks drive up to this depot and there deposit consignments of merchandise, which, after being systematically checked up, are given over into the custody of their respective departments.

A short distance from the receiving depot is the carpenter shop. This measures 50 by 190 feet and, when in operation, it provides one of the most awe-inspiring sights of the place. Humming with activity from sunrise to sundown, its giant machine saws and long work-benches, presided over by master-carpenters, constantly are turning out the finished settings daily required on the stages. In a loft at one end of the building are employed a staff of wood-carvers, whose rare skill is responsible for the pretentious decorative effects in many of the Ince settings.

The last in the line of buildings fringing the eastern boundary of the plant is the garage. This measures 50 by 90 feet and houses the trucks and "location" automobiles used daily by the company. This is fitted with all devices necessary for a machine shop, where almost every "ailment" of an automobile or truck may be remedied. On the outside of the building is a 500-gallon underground tank for gasoline equipped with Bowser automatic measuring pump, similar to those used at all gasoline stations The large number of cars needed by the company require a corps of expert mechanics for their proper care. About thirty automobiles are included in the equipment of the studios.

Business Manager A. H. Allen

The northern side of the property is bounded by the dressing-rooms. These are in the nature of a two-story structure, measuring 500 by 25 feet, and never have failed to stir the admiration of those who have inspected them. Each is equipped with all modern conveniences, such as hot and cold running water, closet-room, ventilation, etc., and is plentifully furnished with a make-up table, mirror, chairs and a couch.

Immediately inside the main entrance gates, is the fireproof film vault. This measures 20 by 32 feet and houses raw stock, finished positive and negative, and the battery of cameras. It is built of steel and concrete and equipped with time-lock vault doors furnished by Hall's Safe Company of Cincinnati. Business Manager Allen had special fire protection prepared for this building. A two-inch water pipe extends around the top of the building on all sides, and another extends to the roof. In case of fire, water is automatically turned on here, thus keeping a sheet of water running on all sides of the building and creating a pool twelve inches deep on top.

Just beyond the film vault is the varied arts building. This is two stories in height and measures 31 by 90 feet. On the ground floor are located two projecting rooms and a department wherein the tinting of the sample positive is done. In this are installed three 6A and one 6B Power's Cameragraphs, supplied to Mr. Ince by the Pacific Amusement Company, who have been handling these machines for a considerable time. The upper floor is devoted to the cutting and assembling rooms, sub-title art work rooms and "still" department, and on the roof is a thoroughly-equipped portrait gallery for publicity purposes.

Even greater pains have been taken to secure absolute fire protection for this building. There are five rooms for film cutting. Each is fitted with fire shutters furnished by the Variety Manufacturing Company, of Chicago. In case of fire, a shutter drops on both sides of the door, and over the windows. At the same time a ventilating flue is opened. Such equipment assures that in case fire in one cutting room starts, no other portion of the building will be injured in the least. The Varied Arts building is also fitted with water pipes extending on all sides which gives the same protection as for the film vault.

Next, in alignment with the Varied Arts building, is the commissary. This measures 100 by 60 feet and is capable of accommodating four hundred persons at a sitting. The food is prepared by culinary experts and served at cost to the employes. In a corner of this structure is a barber-shop and manicure-parlor for the convenience of the players. It has an elegant soda-fountain and well-equipped cigar-stand.

Horizontal to the dressing-room building and bisecting the premises, is the scene-dock. This measures 500 by 30 feet and contains costly settings, in addition to the furniture and miscellaneous properties. It is estimated that the contents of this building approximate a value of nearly $200,000.

Adjacent to the scene-dock is a little structure, measuring 30 by 50 feet, and devoted to the work of the sculpturing department. Fifteen men are employed in this department, the function of which is to supply statuary and other artistic adornments in plaster for the richer settings.

The stages are five in number. Four of these are built of glass and each measures 150 by 50 feet, while the fifth is exposed and measures 200 by 50 feet. An idea of the completeness of the glass stages is available from the fact that each required a carload of glass, making a total of 54,600 square feet. In addition to this, a half ton of white lead was used in the construction of each. This is designed to prevent leakage of rain. Here you will find a battery of Bell and Howell cameras at work.

Each of the four enclosed stages are equipped with a battery of Cooper-Hewitt lamps of sufficient number to light the entire stage for night photographing. Diffusing system employed is one worked out by the men of this studio, which assures no shadows, but at the same time, gives the maximum light. The diffusing cloth was furnished by Cooper, Coate & Casey, a wholesale dry goods firm of Los Angeles, who make a specialty of supplying the needs of studios.

In a far corner of the lot, stands what is unquestionably the most amazing building of the Ince group. It is the laboratory—a structure that measures 57 by 135 feet—and is veritably a magic city for its astounding output. It is operated by a crew of forty-one men, and is responsible for the original developing and printing of all the Ince-Triangle plays. The building embraces one negative-examining room, two negative-cutting rooms, four positive examining rooms, four printing rooms, two dark rooms, one drying room (capacity 16,000 feet), one projecting room, one chemical room, one experimental room, facilities for the making of distilled water, and a refrigerating plant for the manfacture of ice. The capacity of the dark rooms is 100,000 feet of negative and 300,000 feet of positive film per week. A carload of chemicals, demanded by the laboratory work is kept on hand at all times. In the projection room of this laboratory the Power's Cameragraph is also used.

The Fire Department at the Ince Studios

Great care has been exercised in selecting the equipment for the laboratory. A building which houses boilers using crude oil as fuel, has been built a short distance from the main building. In this place is operated a filtering and distilling plant, automatic refrigerating equipment and air cleansing device. All air that goes into the laboratory is first washed through several sheets of water. A part is then heated, and by means of temperature regulators manufactured by the Johnson Service Company of Milwaukee, and installed by Melville C. Hill, their Los Angeles office manager, the desired temperature is maintained in all departments of the laboratory at all times. Each room is fitted with a thermostat, which by compressed air device, automatically operates a mixing damper which controls the intake of hot and cold air. The temperature of the different departments is kept as follows: Washing room, sixty-five degrees; drying room, seventy-five degrees; negative cutting, assembling, printing and chemical rooms are kept at sixty-eight degrees, and the projecting room at seventy. Another thermostat is connected with the hot and cold water intakes for the laboratories and various tanks, and these automatically keep the water at the desired temeprature. Tests made at the studio show that the Johnson system prevents more than two degrees variance either way.

All water used in the factory is either filtered or distilled. Hygeia Stewart Agitator Filter of seventy-two inches in diameter, and a capacity of 6,000 gallons per hour cleanses all water used for washing by the coagulation process. The filter was manufactured by the Hygeia Filter Company of Detroit, Michigan, and installed by their licensed agents, Horstman & Plomert of Los Angeles.

This Los Angeles firm is also responsible for the installation of a distilling system manufactured by the Standard Water Systems Company of Hampton, N. J. This is known as the Tripure. By it, water absolutely free from all mineral or organic matter, and ideal for use in photographic work is obtained. The solvent action of Tripure distilled water, it has been found, tends to make the films sharper in detail, and eliminates all danger of chemical reaction, which is sure to follow when raw or filtered water is used The Standard Tripure still has 250 gallon capacity, and connected with this is a heat exchange and a distilled water storage tank, lined inside with heavily tinned copper. The Fessco automatic oil burner system also installed by Horstmann & Plomert, gives forth the proper heat.

The laboratory is equipped with four Angelus printers, manufactured by the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company. These are especially designed for Alfred Brandt, superintendent of the laboratories. The machines are all extra heavy. The cabinet is of hardwood, divided into two compartments. The upper one contains the motor and mechanism, and the lower the light shift. The printers are designed to prevent scratching and give an extremely sharp print.

The laboratory was built under the personal direction of Alfred Brandt, its superintendent, and by the very few who have had the pleasure of being shown through it, it has been spoken of as the most highly efficient one of its kind. It is spotlessly clean, and not a grain of dust is to be found. All doors and windows are dustproof, and air-tight, and the walls, ceilings, and floors are cleaned several times daily. All of the employes wear white clothes while within the laboratory, and each suit is laundered daily.

The Automatic Refrigerating Companyof Hartford, Conn., installed the plant for keeping both the air and the water in the laboratory at the proper temperature. The system maintains a temperature of about sixty degrees in the developing room and supplies a continuously flowing stream of cool water for washing the film at a capacity of approximately four thousand gallons per hour.

The coils for cooling the developing room are placed in bunkers overhead. The air is blown in from the outside over the coils and allowed to circulate through the room. Sufficient air is supplied so that it is completely changed every fifteen minutes during ten hours of each day. The remainder of the time the blower is shut off.

The water supply storage tanks are divided into two sections. In the smaller section the greater part of the expansion piping is installed and in this the water is cooled to within one or two degrees of the desired temperature. From this it is allowed to overflow into the larger tank. In order to regulate this flow, a float valve is installed. Sufficient expansion piping is installed in the larger tank to cool the water one or two degrees in order that when it flows into the developing tank proper, it may have the scientifically correct temperature.

The Ince studios had a most complete water and sewerage system installed as the plant was built. This work was in charge of F. G. Schilling & Son of Los Angeles. Their first work was that of laying water mains to all parts of the grounds, the dimensions of these being four and six inches. From these attachments to every building were made. The dressing-room building has more than one hundred connections, there being hot and cold water in all of the rooms. The work on this was completed in three weeks. Other buildings have the same conveniences.

The plumbing work on the laboratory by Messrs. Schilling required careful planning and suitable material. The laboratory has three kinds of water. The distilled passes through brass pipes tinned inside, to a tinned copper storage tank on roof, and is delivered by gravity through block tin pipes to the developing, fixing and toning rooms. The plumbing firm of Schilling & Son was also in charge of the plumbing work connected with the installation of the laboratory heating and ventilating system, and fulfilled the contract for the laying of the sewerage and drainage system which involved an expenditure of several thousand dollars.

Prosperity Is Inter-Mountain Keynote

Montana Exhibitors Show Pictures to Capacity at 15 and 25 Cents—Salt Lake Welcomes Wholesome Subjects

THE film situation in the inter-mountain region, embraced in Utah, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho and Montana, is considerably brighter than it was one year ago.

Specially was this noticeable last summer when practically every exhibitor kept open for business—and made money.

The exchange situation, too, has materially cleared during the past twelve months, the price of service generally meeting the posibilities of the towns. The old cry of "cutting prices" has been remarkably faint even in the face of keen competition. Taken all in all, the announced schedule has been maintained and equitable revenue based on population has been the order of the day. All this is in the face of the fact that some exchanges have lost money.

In Montana exhibitors are generally getting fifteen and twenty-five cents and playing to capacity. It is safe to predict that should any prospective exhibitor pitch his tent in Montana with the announced intention of returning to the old "jitney" theatre that he would be promptly run out of town.

The elimination of the unfit exhibitor has gone on apace and the close of 1916 sees the progressive man forging to the front.

The leading exchanges in Salt Lake and Denver are doing good work in aiding the exhibitor along the lines of publicity, accessories and suggestions for advertising stunts and the proper display of advertising matter generally. Today the agent of a film exchange talks other than the excellence of his goods and the poor quality of the other fellow's. He is getting to be an expert in projection and a perambulating ready-reference on problems, with advice on tap for the asking.

Open market booking has been tried and found wanting owing to the uncertainty of service, the auctioning of a feature to the highest bidder and general filibustering methods employed by many traveling men. While the average exhibitor has always been more or less suspicious of the motives of the exchange it has been demonstrated to him during the past year that the exchange is the lesser of the "two evils."

Taken all in all, the representatives of several of the new star companies have experienced decidedly hard sledding in this territory owing to the fact that all sorts and conditions of prices were quoted exhibitors regardless of population conditions, capacity and previous records for the house in question. Where such features have been shown at advanced prices but little money has been made owing to the reaction. Then again, whenever an established star under the new banner has been presented at a house other than the one heretofore associated with the star, the last named house has put on a week of rebookings of the old favorite at the same old prices. In several cities the rebookings have shown a big profit away ahead when the rentals involved are taken into consideration.

The public wants clean pictures. Salt Lake gave a demonstration recently in this direction. One theatre put on Marguerite Clark in "Miss George Washington"; three others put on suggestive subjects. On the first night attendance honors were about even; on the second, the Famous Players film was slightly in the lead. The third night saw the wholesome picture draw the biggest crowd entertained by that theatre since it opened, while the other houses were far behind in patronage.

There is a demand for juvenile programs and quite a number of exhibitors are talking of instituting a circuit, as under existing conditions it is practically impossible to import this class of film from either coast and pay charges both ways. While children's matinees are not big money makers the wide awake exhibitor realizes that they are the best kind of advertising. The children talk about the theatre at the family table; father and mother subconsciously absorb the enthusiasm and in a brief space of time they too become confirmed picture patrons.

Taken all in all, 1916 has been a good year for the majority and the best year yet for the man handling high class pictures. It has been one of the worst for the man handling mediocre and medium goods.

But this section's crying need is more of the advanced type of modern exhibitor calculated to afford dignity and standing to the business.

Fairbanks to Produce in East

Douglas Fairbanks, who will return East this month to reopen the Triangle studio at Fort Lee, N. J., left Los Angeles on December 16, and will be in New York during the holidays. He was accompanied by Mildred Harris, the fifteen-year old Fine Arts player, who was cast in the role of the ingenue with Sir Herbert Beerbohm-Tree in "The Old Folks at Home."

Miss Harris will appear as Fairbanks' leading lady at the star's personal request. She recently won first prize in a California beauty contest.

It is said that John Emerson, who is directing Fairbanks' current production, "The Americano," will continue to direct the comedian during his winter season at Fort Lee.

Censors Want Stated Time for Children in Theatres

At the last meeting of the Minneapolis Censor Board for the year the speakers agreed that children should not be habitual patrons of the motion picture theatres, and that more children's films should be made and shown.

Long before this idea was given to the censor board, the Minneapolis exhibitors worked out a program for showing children's films. The exhibitors do not want children in their theatres all the time. They admit that children should be out of doors some time and at home some of the time. Exhibitors generally prefer to have their houses filled with adults at all times, but there is a demand for juvenile films in Minneapolis.

By having separate performances for children the average exhibitor will lose money, it is said, for two changes a week are the rule in Minneapolis. Juvenile films will have to be run on Saturday afternoons, when the streets are crowded with shoppers who expect to drop into the theatres for rest and entertainment, declare exhibitors.

The censorship body will become on January 1 an advisory committee created by the mayor to view films and make recommendations. The mayor-elect, Thomas Van Lear, will listen to recommendations, but the committee will go to the theatres and see the films just as ordinary patrons.

The board has changed its name to The Minneapolis Motion Picture Review Board.

It will continue to work along lines it has mapped out. These are not radical and the film men believe that in the end good will result. Men and women who are familiar with the film business will speak at their meetings, and the board by co-operation and diplomacy will try to get the Minneapolis film attractions on a basis that it approves.

President George E. Vincent of the University of Minnesota, who on May 1 becomes president of the Rockefeller Foundation, in his address to the board said: "Negative censorship does not remedy evil."

Leon C. Warner a hardware merchant, not a reformer in any sense of the word, but a citizen of sound ideas, is to be head of the board for 1917.

Spanuth Addresses Convention

H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has just returned from a visit to Detroit, where he made an address before the exhibitors' convention.

Mr. Spanuth states that Mr. Kunski and other prominent Michigan exhibitors viewed the co-operative plan of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation most favorably.

Sheer Casts Players for Prominent Companies

Although but a few months old, William A. Sheer, Inc., under the guidance of William A. Sheer and his associates, has become prominent as a players' representative and cast director. In the past two weeks the company filled three of the most important casts in the east, among which were the Mary Pickford Company, Popular Plays and Players-Metro, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and Tom Van Planck, Inc., a new corporation of very promising aspects.

Mr. Sheer, although a young man in years, has already established a reputation as a cast director, during the past five years in which he was connected with the Keystone, Fox, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and the World Film Corporation in that capacity. Mr. Sheer now personally represents the following stars, who are under absolute contract to him, viz.: Gail Kane, Al Jolson, Marguerite Leslie, Earle Foxe, J. Herbert Frank, Olga Olonova, William H. Tooker, Marie Chambers, Robert Whitworth, Zena Keefe, Alma Hanlon, Katherine Kaelred and many others.

Among those recently placed by Mr. Sheer are: Stanley Forde, Earle Foxe, J. Herbert Frank, L. Rogers Lytton, Frank Andrews, Alma Hanlon, Lionel Adams, Olga Olonova, Edna Whistler, Robert Whitworth, Marie Chambers, Frank McGlynn, Marie Shotwell, Edwards Davis, Nell Morgan, Livingtson Masson, Zena Keefe, Gilbert Rooney, Betty Randolph, Winifred Harris, Grace Griswold.

Paramount Makes Effort to Recover Two Pictures Stolen in Boston

Efforts are being made throughout the country, through the Paramount exchanges, to locate two Paramount Pictures which were recently stolen from the Famous Players Film Company of New England, Boston, Paramount's exchange.

The prints were those of Mary Pickford in "Esmeralda," produced by the Famous Players Film Company, and Donald Brian in "The Voice of the Fog," produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

Notification has been issued by the Paramount exchanges to all exhibitors to immediately notify the exchange in their district, should anybody in their town accept or attempt to book these two productions.

From a number of clues that have been followed, it appears that the prints, after they were stolen were shipped West, but up to the present time, they have not made their appearance.

"Jimmy Dale" Goes Well in Ohio Town

H. E. Mickey of the Luna theatre, Fostoria, Ohio, states that he is doing splendidly with the Unicorn's "Billy West Series" of comedies and has also signed up for the "Jimmie Dale Series." Mr. Mickey conducts one of the finest theatres in his section of the state, and is playing to capacity all the time.

"Eyes of the World" Premier January 1st

Second Clune Production, Adaptation of Harold Bell Wright's Novel, Will Have Premier in Los Angeles—Book Was Followed Faithfully

THE national premier of the second Clune Film Producing Company production is to be given at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, Monday, January 1. This will be the presentation of "The Eyes of the World," adapted from the novel laid in California of the same name by Harold Bell Wright, and is the first story of this author to be picturized.

The work of producing this picture was taken up almost eight months ago, and all people of the Clune Company have given their entire time to the making of the picture, which has been cut to less than ten reels. The direction of the photoplay was in charge of Donald Crisp, who had the co-operation and personal aid of the author, Mr. Wright, and Producer W. H. Clune and General Manager Lloyd Brown.

The premier of this subject promises to be a notable one, as the management of the company promises even a more elaborate presentation than that accorded "Ramona" at the Los Angeles, New York City, Chicago and other showings. Mr. Brown worked out for "Ramona" three distinct atmosphere creating settings which gave to the presentation an attractive feature. Mr. Brown promises even more startling inovations with the showing of "The Eyes of the World."

The entire scenic staff of the Clune studio has been kept busy for weeks preparing the scenic embellishments. The largest cyclorama drop prepared for a theatre west of New York City has been prepared. It is spoken of as a gorgeous reproduction of California mountain scenery.

Monroe Salisbury, who appeared in the leading role of Ramona Allessandro, appears in the part of Conrad Legrange, the journalist. Wright, in his story, had Captain Allen Kelly, a widely-known California journalist, as his type in writing, and Salisbury, although he never met Kelly, is said by acquaintances of the newspaper man to give a life-like impersonation. The actor made up for the part solely from the description in the book.

Higher Prices for Minneapolis Picture Shows

Minneapolis exhibitors are going to make more money after January 1.

On that date, if they find the procedure does not violate any of the state laws they will with few exceptions raise their prices 50 per cent. This was voted at the last meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Corporation of the Northwest. Exhibitors in outside towns, members of the corporation have been advised to do the same thing if their clintele will stand for it.

The admission prices when the theatres were in made-over store buildings, were uniformly 10 cents. They are the same today with better theatres than the so-called legitimate houses of fifteen years ago. The exhibitors feel that they are entitled to the money.

Coal and taxes have all risen in the last year. Exhibitors are buying better films, installing luxurious dressing and lounging rooms and giving occasional free exhibitions to educators and others on special occasions. They have yielded often at a loss to whims of an unofficial censor board and yet they have charged the dime museum prices of the old days.

Theatres that employ orchestras, and install organs, to make the film drama live and powerful, believe that the public will pay 15 cents. A part of this increase will go to improve the exhibitions, but if the exhibitors keep all of it there will be little complaint.

Chicago Reel Fellows Hold Election

The Reel Fellows' Club, of Chicago, has been active again. An election was held on Thursday, December 14, and on Saturday, December 16, a big stag, entitled "The Days of '49," was presented. These two affairs mark a big windup for 1916 Reel Fellows' events.

"My Country" Shown at Bazaar

The feature of the National Preparedness Bazaar, which opened last week at the Grand Central Palace, was the Variety Film Corporation's preparedness picture, "My Country First," starring Tom Terriss. Louis Rosenbluh, president of the Variety concern, donated the picture to the bazaar, among the patrons and patronesses of which are Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Jules S. Bache, Mrs. Ledyard Blair, Mrs. John R. Drexel, and Messrs. Major William H. Elliott, Sterling P. Story, Count James Minotta and many others.

Mr. Terris appeared in person and delivered a speech on preparedness at each showing of the picture, which is in six reels. His remarks were listened to by delegations from the army and navy and from the Boy Scouts and similar organizations, as well as by the throngs that packed the Grand Central Auditorium.

Mr. Rosenbluh announces that the picture will be shown every afternoon and evening during the continuance of the bazaar, which will last ten days.

Dixie Ready with Two Features

The Dixie Film Corporation, with producing headquarters at Chicago and Jacksonville, Fla., will distribute its products through state rights mediums, and "Tempest and Sunshine" and "Just a Song at Twilight," its first two productions, are now about ready to market.

John W. Heney, of Heney and Hawkins, is the central distributing medium.

Evelyn Greeley and Pedro de Cordoba are the principal players.

"Tempest and Sunshine" was staged at Jacksonville, Fla., this spring, and "Just a Song at Twilight" was completed only last week. Carlton King, for five years an actor and director with the Edison Company, staged both productions.

Tandy and Lynch have procured both productions for their southern territory.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR BUSY EXHIBITORS

General Film Service

"The Tiger's Claw" (Kalem—Grant Police Reporter. Dec. 22.) The revenge of the criminal on the stool pigeon is the source of punch for this one-reel melo, and it abounds in the usual points, the use of the girl to frame up the weaker for the stronger (physically) and the intervention of Grant. Carrying a gun around in a dinner pail and a leap from one building top to the window of another building just in time is the final thrill. This leap is cleverly done, landing Grant in the center of the room where the shot is about to be fired, just in time to knock the villain silly. A good punch, which could only have been more effective if the window and glass had crashed into the room with the rescuer.

"Quest of the Golden Goat" (Kalem—Ham Comedy, Dec. 26.)—We miss Ham in this reel. Bud carries the comedy along very well, said comedy being the rapid fire action resulting from Bud's misunderstanding of the writing on a cuff in a Chinese laundry where he gets temporary employment. He reads, "Have left my fortune at the Golden Goat." Strange coincidence there is a "Golden Goat" cult, and Bud is initiated—then he discovers the owner of the shirt drinking up the last nickel of his fortune at the "Golden Goat"—saloon. Average comedy—nothing extra but fairly funny. We understand Ham will be back next week.

"A Race With Death" (Kalem—Helen Series, Dec. 30.)—This week Helen forgets her motorcycle and sticks to just train thrills. There is a new operator at Lone Point, and he finds a wallet full of money, dropped by a rich ranchowner. The ranchowner's horse kicks him and drops him stunned in the road, shortly after. The boys think the night operator stole the wallet, and lock him in a box car and set it free on the track running head on toward the fast limited. Helen rides and overtakes the box car just in time to throw a switch and side track the car. The thrill here misses out, chiefly because there is nothing to show that the express engineer saw any danger—and if he does not, who would? As if the director saw he had mised here, he follows the car on the siding, where Helen stops it just as it is about to fall through an open draw. Here again an extra shudder could have been produced by having the car actually drop off the edge, careen, and land half over the river brink. Not up to usual Helen standard.

"A Tale from the Decameron." (Essanay. One reel drama. Screen time, 30 min.) Synopsis.—Richard Ryder, a wealthy man, forces his attentions upon pretty Mildred Tomes. She resents them and in the ensuing struggle he falls on a steel spindle and dies. Mildred's sweetheart, Thomas North, secretary of the dead man, is accused of murder and though he suspects the truth he faces death rather than betray his financee. In the end, however, Mildred confesses her part in the tragedy and all are exonerated. Released Dec. 26.

"Canimated Noos Pictorial No. 21" and Cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson with Lake Tahoe, Calif. Scenic. (Essanay. Split reel.) Synopsis.—At Garlico, Mex., showing a few interesting spots in the small time war; growing rhubarb pies in Mississippi; "how the infectious flivver is made," viz., by pouring one hundred pounds of bolts, nuts and screws into a concrete mixer and the finished product comes forth. Half of the reel shows the beautiful scenery on and around Lake Tahoe. Released Dec. 27.

"Wife in Sunshine." (Essanay. Drama. Screen time, 31 min.) Synopsis.—The demon—social ambition—wrecks the home of Artist Edward Morrison, whose wife Katherine squanders his money on finery and entertainment. He reproaches her and she, on the advice of Harold Hitchcock, a social viper, divorces him. Harold then seeks to rid himself of Katherine and ridicules the idea of marrying her. She thereupon seeks a reconciliation with Edward, but he has already married his model, with whom he is living happily. Released Dec. 30.

"The Little Brown Mole." (Essanay. Screen time, 31 min. A Black Cat Feature.) Synopsis.—Paul Fancourt (Sydney Ainsworth) was in love with Olive Berkley (Lillian Drew), but on being separated he married Leila, whose violent temper causes their separation. Leila, unaware of her identity, employs Olive as her secretary. In a particularly violent display of temper, Leila dies of apoplexy and Olive who still loves Paul Fancourt utilizes her strange resemblance to Leila to pose as his wife and succeeds so far as to effect a "reconciliation," and as he believes is remarried to him, but the fraud is exposed by the absence of a little brown mole on his former wife. Olive flees in terror, but is pursued and reclaimed by Paul. Released Dec. 19.

"Taking the Count." (Essanay. Screen time, 18 min.) Synopsis.—A crowd of society women meet an incoming steamer to get the Count on his arrival, but Ben Turpin, the cabin steward, and his mate are the only two men seen in dress clothes, so they are mistaken for the Count and his companion. They are therefore whisked off and entertained lavishly until the police find them when they are promptly returned aboard ship to wait on the captain's table. Released Dec. 20.

"On the Brink of War." (Kalem—Girl from 'Frisco Series No. 21, Dec. 20.)—The snappy variety of this series keeps up unabated and this week we have a little of race prejudice, very timely, with Mexican greasers as the subject matter. True Boardman takes the role of John Wallace, who seeks election on a Mexican Exclusion platform, in California. A poor devil Mexican is "framed" by Luke Larrabee, a crooked politician who seeks to get control through Wallace. Barbara scents trouble at once, through her woman's instinct, and when the Secretary of State (a splendidly done characterization of Lansing) comes to California, on the representations of the Mexican ambassador, to prevent a certain war which would result from such legislation, he finds in Barbara a real champion, and Barbara shows up Larrabee to her fiance and saves him from lending his good name to a malicious plot. Wonderful mountain scenery, fine mob scenes, some good scraps between Mexicans and cowboys, and the usual fast riding stunts which have made this series always a hit, keep this episode up to standard. When one of the boys gets Larrabee, pulling him off his horse on the fly, there is one of the best thrills seen in some time.

Mutual Program

"Indiscretion." (Mutual. Two reels. Dec. 25.)—Featuring Ethel Grandin as the willful girl, who will marry or not as she likes, and Charles Eldridge (who is always the good actor) as her stern parent. To avoid love passages with her chosen mate (Lawrence White), Ethel dons boy's clothing, and strikes out, via the bedroom window in search of adventure, more pleasing to her juvenile ideas. She falls into the hands of underworld characters, who are advised of her identity by the dissolute son of her father's butler, who is an associate of the gang. Plotting to secure a large sum through the forcible detention of the girl, the rascals overreach themselves and are raided, and rushed to jail in the nick of time by Ethel's fiance, who at once takes on a glamor in her eyes, which convinces her of the fact that more charming adventures may be had at his side at home.

"The Elopement." (Mutual-Cub. One reel. Dec. 14.)—A bucolic comedy featuring the antics of a fat girl, who very likely was a man. The usual farmer, farm-hands and villagers are in evidence all through the picture, which also has some chase scenes and several falls and fierce hand-to-hand battles for the ladies' favors. Some remarkable early morning photography in the hills is a part of this otherwise not phenomenal production.

"Peter, the Comic Poet." (Mutual. One reel. Dec. 16.)—Fairly descriptive of the aims and ambitions of every-day people, and will appeal to the majority of comedy lovers. Bud Ross, as Peter, sees a fortune within his grasp through the medium of scenario writing. A paper offers $1,000 for a good picture, which Peter decides to walk away with. On commencing work, however, the children annoy him so, that he is forced to take his work out of doors. Alongside the barn he goes to work, but he falls asleep and dreams dreams of untold wealth pouring into his coffers from his writings. He becomes exhausted from his endeavors, and his large force of lady clerks are spraying him with lavender water and eau de Cologne to revive him, when he finds himself drenched to the hide, not from the sprayings of his clerks, but as the result of his sleeping in a heavy rainstorm.

"Gertie's Latest Affair." (Mutual. One reel. Dec. 7.)—This picture has many amusing features, and opens up with a couple of spooning couples in the park. Reggie leaves his Aunt Gwendolin to meet his sweetheart, and an old lover of Aunt Gwendolin's once again cheers her heart. Reggie's sweetheart, however, "makes a mash" on Bobby Gob, the aunt's admirer, and complications follow. After one or two unpleasantnesses, in one of which Reggie's sweetheart is beaten with a carpet beater by the irate aunt, matters are smoothed out and tranquility reigns.

"His Uncle's Ward." (Mutual. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 30.)—A comedy unique among comedies, for it treats, in a delightful vein, a situation not uncommon among men. Sydney Mason and Elsie Albert have the leading roles and they acquit themselves admirably. The picture is dignified and although a comedy has several tense dramatic situations, and we venture to predict a sound acceptance of the film.

The theme itself is interesting. An uncle, a crank on eugenics, has selected a healthy specimen of womanhood for his nephew to wed and so informs the young man by mail. Knowing his uncle's eugenic tendencies, Dick, the nephew, jumps to conclusions and declares he wants no spectacled old dame for his, and lays his plans to defeat the uncle's desires, but when the young lady appears upon the scene—and is indeed fair to look upon—and makes such a hit with the young men friends of the nephew, he regrets his step and tries to undo what he has done. The young lady, however, is wise to his deception, and teases him to the point of distraction, when she relents, they compare notes and decide to join in the holy bonds of matrimony.

"Shot in the Fracas." (Vogue. Two reels. Sun., Dec. 10.)—A comedy of the slap-stick variety, directed by Robin Williamson and featuring Ben Turpin and Margaret Templeton. It contains some amusing situations that are mirth-provoking and doubtless will be appreciated by many habitues of picture houses. A medal valued at $1,000 cuts a big figure in the picture as do also a willing wife and a jealous spouse. The picturization is good, the acting fine and should be well received.

"Mutual Weekly, No. 101." (Mutual. Tues., Dec. 12.)—This ever-interesting series is maintaining its instructive features to a marked degree and covers the various topics uppermost in the public mind and foremost in the public prints of to-day. This reel portrays General Joffre and staff; British artillery; ruins of Combles after a bombardment; Philadelphia raised turkey being shipped to market; safety scheme inaugurated by New York police department; hill-climbing contest by motorcycles at Los Angeles, Cal.; armored war tank of the Canadian-Francais troops; army and navy football game at Polo Grounds, New York City in the presence of fifty thousand spectators; the home and hobbies of the late Jack London at Glen Ellen, Cal.; Bucharest being deserted as the enemy closes in; the Seventh Regiment on the Mexican border, and their return; chrysanthemum show at Garfield Park, Chicago; 207th battalion of Ottawa, Canada, receiving their colors from Sir Samuel Hughes and finally the aftermath of the automobile speed contest, showing the wreckage of Lewis Jackson's Marmon after its having struck a tree.

See America First, No. 88. (Gaumont.) Synopsis.—The picturesque beauty of the mountains of West Virginia and the scenery along the Gouley river are the prominent features of this reel, which also includes a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, animated for the screen by Harry Palmer. Released December 27.

Tours Around the World, No. 8. (Gaumont.) Synopsis.—Florence, the wonderful treasure house of Italian art, holds the "place d'honneur" in this picture, which also depicts the valley of the Arno, taken from the square of Michael Angelo; the Uffizi and Pitti Palaces and a number of art pieces, including "Perseus" of Benvenuto Cellini and the "The Rape of the Sabines" of Giovanni da Bologna. The second section includes a trip from Airolo to Andermatt through the St. Gothard Pass, and in the third section views along the Theve river, a small tributary of the Oise in France are depicted. Released December 28.

"Mutual Weekly," No. 102. (Gaumont.) Synopsis.—This weekly includes more pictures of the battle of the Somme and includes views of the big 75s being rushed to more advantageous positions; also an air squadron ready to leave and cathedral ruins. The recent visit of President Wilson to New York to signal for the permanent lighting of the Statue of Liberty is also pictured, as is also the launching of a gold dredge, which, operated by three men, digs 15,000 tons of dirt a day, and the opening of the new scenic boulevard at San Francisco, Cal.

"Reel Life, No. 34." (Gaumont. One reel.) Synopsis.—The revival of the sailing ship owing to the demand for tonnage created by the European war is shown in pictures of the ship yards at Essex, Mass. "The Great American Dish" is a title introducing pork and beans, and shows its scientific preparation. Then follows views from the Soudan picturing the natives as they prepare their food. Released December 24.

"Reel Life, No. 35." (Gaumont. Split reel.) Synopsis.—This opens with pictures of "The Olive Industry in California" and is followed by "The Value of Venom," depicting the methods adopted in combatting the effects of snake bites as developed in Brazil. It also shows "A Most Unique Basket," illustrating the uses to which the shell of the Armadillo is put. Released December 31.

"Tours Around the World, No. 9." (Gaumont. One reel.) Synopsis.—It takes the spectators upon a trip to Rio de Janeiro, the picturesque capital of Brazil, and then for a ramble around Luchon, in the French Pyrenees. Released January 2.

"See America First, No. 69." (Gaumont. Split reel.) Synopsis.—Gives an adequate showing of Pasadena, Cal., the city of roses, and the second half is devoted to a Komic Kartoon, "Miss Catnip Goes to the Movies," by Harry Palmer. Released January 3.

Paramount Program

"Their Week End." (Black Diamond. One-reel comedy.) Synopsis.—This picture tells of a wrecked auto, an injured duke, who is rushed to a hospital, and a couple of tramps, who coming across the wreck, search it for spoils and find the duke's clothing, which they immediately take possession of. They also find an invitation to the Climbers' for a week end, whither he was bound when his auto turned turtle. This, also, they appropriated and went to the Climbers, where their antics are weird and conduct extraordinary. Released December 25 by Paramount.

"Fifty-Fifty." (Paramount. One-reel Cartoon.) Synopsis.—Ashley Miller contributes this plastique cartoon, which deals with the dilemma of a young man who marries an apparently charming girl, who discovers, when too late, that her "charms" are not all her own. Many comedy situations arise, but the young man finally becomes philosophical and finds a satisfactory solution.

"In the Land of Evangeline with Burton Holmes." (Paramount. One-reel Trav.) Synopsis.—Burton Holmes conducts his party through the lovely country called "Arcadie" by Longfellow in his immortal "Evangeline" in his trip from Boston to Halifax, thence to Nova Scotia. He deals with the sad story of the beautiful Evangeline, who, being separated from her lover on the day set for their wedding, is transformed into a determined woman, and after a long search for Gabriel she finds him in a hospital in Philadelphia.

Pathe Exchange

"Luke's Shattered Sleep." (Rolin.)—Lonesome Luke and his weird associates here disport themselves in a cheap rooming house that furnishes beds for ten cents and beds with springs for fifteen. The humor is rather low on the whole concerning itself with the discovery of an odor surrounding a gentleman's feet, rats and fleas in the bed, and the breaking of various obstacles over heads. There is some original business introduced besides. On the whole a funny picture.

"Frills and Thrills." (Florence Rose Fashions. Number Twelve.)—The "thrill" part of the title is intended for mere man we suppose, as the picture delves into the intricacies of lingerie of all sorts and descriptions. It is rather thrilly at that. The rest of the reel consists of the display of afternoon tea gowns.

"Pathe News, No. 97." (Pathe. One reel. Educ.)—This film shows the nineteen-ton submarine built in 1879 by John Holland; a 'pos sum trot in Tennessee; Secretary of the Treasury William C. McAdoo and his wife at Saratoga, Cal.; Allied troops in the Balkans; fresh troops being sent to reinforce the Russian armies; an animated cartoon, "Our Merchant Marine," by John C. Terry; representatives of foreign governments attend a trial test of the new Marlin machine gun at Larchmont, N. Y.; one thousand students of the government's Indian school receiving military instruction at Carlisle, Pa.; efficient and productive horticultural implements at Davis, Cal.; the First Virginia Artillery at San Antonio, Tex.; children save old newspapers in aid of the playground fund of Washington, D. C.; effect of the defect in the city's water supply at Philadelphia, Pa.; police department of New York City starts its safety campaign, and the ninth annual apple show is opened by King Pip at Spokane, Wash.

"Pathe News, No. 100." (Pathe. One-reel. Ed.) Synopsis.—This reel contains pictures of ice skating at the Hotel Biltmore; shipping thousands of horses to the Allies weekly; New York City's slogan, "Walk to Work," in the fresh air campaign; Sir William Dunn, Lord Mayor of London, reviewing troops; King Alphonso's return to Madrid, Spain, after a long absence; making fat people thin, as demonstrated by George Bothner; life of the Indians on their reservations at San Diego, Cal.; the Council for National Defense at Washington, D. C.; gathering of evergreen trees at Manistique, Mich., for the Yuletide season; the fall of Bucharest; Governor Johnson of California driving the first stake in the $10,000,000 project for a deep water canal to connect Golden Gate with Sacramento, and the Holy Angels Church celebrates centenary aot Buffalo, N. Y.

Universal Program

"Sammie Johnsin Slumbers Not." (Universal. One-reel comedy.) Synopsis.—Sammie's slumbers are disturbed by the serenading of the cats in the neighborhood, so he hires a bulldog which drives the pests away, but no sooner has Sammie dispensed with the services of the bulldog than the cats return in force and make the night more hideous than before. Released December 31.

"Civilization in the Far East." (Universal. Split reel. Educ.) Synopsis.—The native rulers of India pride themselves upon the possession of large collections of animals. This picture, from photographs of Dr. Dorsey, shows close-ups of monkey families, wild boar, elephants and other native beasts of India. Released December 31.

"Universal Screen Magazine." (Universal. Ed. One-reel.) Synopsis.—Issue No. 3 of this series shows the manufacture of feather boas from the time the feathers are secured from the ostrich to the finished product; some views of the floating Charity Hospital, then follow views of New York City, this being the first of a series of pictures of the great cities of the world. The picture closes with a comic incident, entitled "Things That Never Happened."

"Such Is Life in Alaska." (Universal. One-reel trav.) Synopsis.—This picture, interspersed with drawings by Hy Mayer, shows views of the ice fields and snowy ranges, herds of reindeer, which the Alaskan Eskimos are learning to care for, and finally some remarkable effects of silhouette drawings which dissolve into the real landscape and vice versa.

"Perils of a Plumber." (L-Ko. Wed., Dec. 27.)—Dan Russell appears again in this one. Russell has an entirely original line of business and tricks which makes his every appearance a signal for a real good comedy. With the exception of a few scenes in which poor photography prevails, "Perils of a Plumber" is a highly diverting release. A decided hit.

"Good-Morning, Judge." (Victor. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 28.)—Written by Grace Cunard and produced by Francis Ford this comedy in which two young persons, for some unknown reason believe themselves guilty of smuggling, are the prominent characters, gets a few laughs, but not enough to put it cleanly over. The character of the situations never varies, and no real story is ever brought out. Mina Cunard and Ernie Shields are the principals.

"The Prodigal Daughter." (Rex. Sun., Dec. 31.)—Allen Holubar and Agnes Vernon are starred in this picture, which is full of pathos, and reveals the Thanksgiving dinner being partaken of in the absence of the daughter who left the parental roof some years previously. The "first snow of the year" greeted as "The Lord's Messenger of Peace" finds the daughter and her child scantily clothed and weak outside her father's home. She faints, and the child by a violent ringing of the door bell brings aid, and on being admitted to the house recognition is made, but the father, still stern, declared his daughter must go, but the granddaughter may stay. They are inseparable, however, and the usual happy ending ensues.

"Giant Powder." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Dec. 30.)—Written by Maxwell Ryder and starring Edith Johnson and Fred Church, this is a gripping play, based on mining life in the West. The general store is faithfully depicted, as also are the characters to be met in such localities. A rich man's son out West prospecting makes desperate love to the daughter of the local tradesman, and has for a rival the real bad man of the camp. Fisticuffs ensue, and when visited by his father, sister and city sweetheart he is found stripped to the waist and battling with his rival, whom he defeats. Later when the midday shot has been planted, and the blast is about to explode, and all the men are scurrying to places of safety, the hero's foot becomes caught in the blast crevices and he is unable to extricate himself. Then his former rival covers himself with glory by tempting Fate and going to his rescue.

"Mines and Matrimony." (Joker. Sat., Dec. 30.)—Gale Henry, Heine Conklin and other Joker favorites chase a gold-brick through several hundred feet, finally winding up in a mine shaft with a rope and pulley hoist. Every time they tried to pull up the unfortunate who had fallen down the pit, it would mean a swap of balance, until the bride finally meets her fate by grabbing the groom half-way and holding him in mid-air until the preacher could tie the knot from above. The gold-brick failed to figure in the final balance.

"Phil's Busy Day." (L-Ko. Fri., Dec. 29.)—Mr. Dunham is again revelling in his destructive temperament, and after shattering dishes, furniture and wife's heart, does some rapid transit scenes from his house to the adjoining one, via convenient branches of a weeping willow. Good fast chase and novel stunts fill the most of this reel to such good effect that the need of good acting is not evident, nor would it be noted if present. An auto loaded with passengers is shown plunging into the ocean at the finish.

"Toto of the Byways." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 29.)—Light drama concerning a little Paris girl, who, brought up as a crook, turns straight through the influence of an English artist, and proves the means of frustrating her old pals when they attempt to steal a valuable painting of her father's. There is a little too much incident in this drama for smooth sailing and a few hackneyed situations are introduced without rhyme or reason. Edith Roberts makes Toto a lively figure, while others are: Harry Benham, Charles Slattery and Johnnie Walker. Catherine Carr wrote the scenario and Lee Kohlmar produced.

"Pretty Baby." (Nestor. Mon., Dec. 25.)—By Bess Meredith the story is innocent fun and features the most charming infant yet filmed. Pearl Elmore, once of Fine Arts, and Fred Gamble, once of Keystone, help Eddie Lyons, a girl and the baby to keep the grins going. A young married couple, mature relative who hates children, and a brief and unexpected visit during which baby must be disposed of, all go to make the plot a gay series of gasps.

"Birds of a Feather." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Dec. 26.)—This depicts in entirely too great detail the efforts of an ex-convict to go straight. The story is padded by way of lengthening each individual scene until after a while the whole thing becomes extremely boresome. As for the story itself, it is poorly put together, there being several loose ends to it. William V. Mong wrote it, and he it is who plays the lead. Others are: Nellie Allen, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Harry Holden.

"Stronger Than Steel." (Laemmle. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 27.)—This stars, Allen Holubar and Louise Lovely, and is an adaptation of one of George Bronson-Howard's stories. It opens up with a group of stage door Johnnies awaiting the chorus girls, and one of the latter motors off with one of the party, but a tiff puts a speedy end to the evening. A tramp appears on the scene, and appeals for money for food. The man in the case takes the beggar to his bachelor quarters to experience the sensation of watching a really hungry man eat. While at table the man chides the tramp for being down and out, and advises him never to go hungry, even though he had to steal to secure food. Taking him at his word, the tramp decides to rob his benefactor; he does so, and a terrific fight takes place in which the clubman is worsted. The police arrive upon the scene, but instead of causing the tramp's arrest, he presents him with the articles of silverware he was about to steal.

THE RESULT ON THE SCREEN

SPEAKING frankly and saying clearly exactly what one means is an art, yet the "NEWS" has demonstrated from letters published in its columns recently that it is reaching and stirring up interest among people who can do just this thing. Let us have more letters.

The Middle Westerner is right, for we all overlook things which are good and what is more, we do it every day. The only way to find out what is good, as he says, is to give a trial to things which sound reasonable. Don't scoff at things because you never heard of them. There are lots of worse habits in this world than cultivating the practice of improving our conditions by trying out new devices.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 SEVENTH AVENUE,
NEW YORK CITY.

GENTLEMEN:

I am going to write you from my own experience, as I see conditions in one branch of the industry which, at least from my angle, is the branch which brings in the money—THE PICTURE.

An exhibitor is the last man on earth who should turn a deaf ear to anyone who approaches him with anything new. He should at least hear the story and give the new commodity consideration and even a trial if it has the earmarks of a money-maker.

The motion picture business has progressed with long and rapid strides, not because its leaders were "from Missouri" and had to "be shown" overmuch, but because they saw the bonanza that lay before them, and with that foresight came the realization that others would also see, and give them no handicap in the race to stake their claims.

The race became, and still is, for the men who "grub stake" themselves the best,—who are provided with the best equipment obtainable.

Each individual who passes his coin into our box-offices is an unconsciously self-appointed judge of the race. Grant that he is attracted by our exterior display. That is an important factor toward our progress;—but, he gave up his money, not to admire our glittering lights, but to see pictures—good pictures—pictures of a quality that he knows he can see for the price he paid.

He is discriminating. He knows good pictures from bad;—although it is improbable that he knows why they are good or bad.

He sees the quality of picture that he expected, or he does not,—and there rests his judgment upon our endeavors.

The story of the picture may have been ideal. The film may have been perfect. We have spent our money for that picture in good faith, for the benefit of our patrons, yet we may have spoiled the illusion by unsteady projection, a flickering light, a careless or a conscientious, but overworked operator.

Our flasher sign and attractive entrance, our decorations and upholstery are valuable assets, but they are merely adjuncts. They constitute the fancy box in which our wares are packed, which is right, for the exterior appearance usually reflects the interior conditions.

The fundamental consideration, and the primary source of our income, is the quality of the pictures that we show. Therefore, nothing is of such vital importance to us, as the result on the screen.

We are on the "firing line" of this business, and our success or failure is dependent upon the quality of our ammunition. We must show pictures that are as perfect as is humanly and mechanically possible—and remember there are manufacturers begging us for the opportunity to put in their goods. Their success is dependent upon ours, so—for the benefit of us both—they offer us the fruits of that notoriously creative American brain.

"The business is in its infancy" is an old cry; but—consider a minute. Do you suppose that the millions invested are going to lie quiet and be satisfied with bank interest? Not while one dollar will breed another.

As fast as those dollars collect they are being turned into new channels and each channel directs the flow toward some improvement of the industry, whether it be in the small detail of a machine or the filming of an elaborate production, and, fellow exhibitors, it is all being done for our benefit. We are the men who will, or should use, that improved ammunition.

We may believe it wisdom to let the other fellow "try it on," which he will do, and then we will have the doubtful pleasure of eating his dust.

The industry has progressed far enough in its "infant" state to have established certain standards. It is no longer necessary for the manufacturer to "make the best" of conditions that are peculiarly his own. The better motion picture machine manufacturers and publishers conduct departments to advise and care for our particular needs. They would tell us—to mention a few obvious facts—that it is a folly to drive a machine by hand while motors are available; to use alternating current while it is possible to convert it to direct current; or to feed our lamp by hand when there are arc controllers on the market.

We must not think that because we have a machine, a lamp, a film, a screen and an operator, that we have provided all that is necessary to satisfy a normal audience.

The picture must be as perfect as is mechanically possible. I say "mechanically" advisedly. The picture was brought into being mechanically—it lives on the screen mechanically—and it dies by mechanical wear.

Our operator is human and has the human frailties. He cannot be expected to do all of these manual things that you would set him to, and do all of them rightly.

He cannot turn a crank with the precision of a motor drive, nor can he do anything else properly while he is turning that crank. For example, he cannot feed his lamp to the absolutely perfect arc maintained by an arc controller, nor can he "frame" and focus his picture while he is feeding the lamp. Therefore, for a given number of things that an operator must accomplish manually, a certain proportion must suffer neglect.

The average manager may think that an operator has little to do. That is exactly as it should be. The less he has to do, manually, and the more that is done for him, mechanically, the better will be the result on the screen.

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Edited by I. G. Sherman

THROUGH the courtesy of Mr. O. F. Spahr, president of the Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago, Ill., and which company manufactures the Motiograph projectors, we are submitting the following to our readers, which we feel sure will be of interest.

In describing the latest model Motiograph with its many improvements and which is now ready for the market, by referring to plate No. 1 you will note that the gear cover is now hinged to the mechanism proper. This facilitates instant inspection of the working parts as well as greatly simplifying the operation of oiling, even while the machine is running. This is now an important Motiograph feature.

IN plates 2, 3 and 4 are illustrated the new motor drive attachment which heretofore has been mounted on the gear cover but which is now built into and is practically a part of the main frame casting. This new location makes it possible to use a motor belt that is considerably shorter, and as the large pulley is now on a level with the mechanism sub-base, it does away with the possibility of fulcrum vibrations which are encouraged when using high mounted motor pulley or the snapping of a loose belt.

The large belt pulley shaft on the new attachment is two inches long and three-eighths of an inch in diameter, while the steel pinion on its end meshes directly into the lower sprocket shaft gear, and due to the different direction of revolution, the motor belt on the latest improved Motiographs should now be crossed, as shown in plate 3.

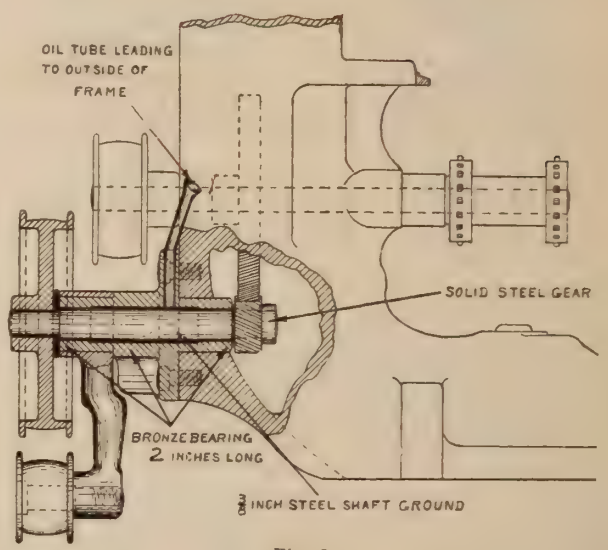

Fig. 2

A LOOP setter is now furnished and is supplied by the manufacturer at a small extra charge. This loop setter can be fitted to both the upper and lower sprockets. The necessity of an upper sprocket loop setter is now added, as in most cases this loop increases in size due to the loss of the lower one, often to such an extent that the machine must be stopped to enable the operator to shorten it. The Motiograph mechanism is equipped with both upper and lower loop setters when so ordered, which overcomes this objectionable feature.

PLATE 5 shows the latest improved condenser mount which is now made of one solid iron casting. This means the even distribution of heat to the condensers and each condensing lens is held in its carrier by an independent light spring tension which gives very easily and allows for the expansion and contraction of the glass, thereby reducing condenser breakage to a minimum.

Another point of added value is that the rear condenser is adjustable and can be moved backward or forward in order to obtain its correct focal position. The cover of this mount is hinged and on it is mounted an indicating knob that when turned to the front or rear, either condenser can be ejected from the mount when it becomes necessary on account of the condenser becoming broken to replace it with a new one without having to touch it with the hand. Taking the new condenser mount as a whole it is something new and a most practical holder for these lenses.

ANOTHER feature of great value is the sliding or floating disc connection shown in plate 6, which has been used on the Motiograph machine for over fifteen months and has proven its worth wherever it has been used. The use of this sliding disc connection between the framing device and the mechanism proper practically isolates the framer, making it an absolutely separate and independent unit having its own balance wheel to govern the action of the star and cam. It also brings about another ideal condition, the act of framing the picture up or down, has absolutely no effect upon the relative position of the shutter to the intermittent sprocket, consequently no shutter setting is needed, for when it is ONCE SET IT IS ALWAYS SET.

TWO balance wheels are mounted in the mechanism, one as before stated on the framer and the other in the mechanism, insuring a perfectly balanced machine and reducing wear in all parts to a minimum.

The Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company are always pleased to show those interested through their factory and glad to give a thorough demonstration of the machine as well as to explain the various operations necessary in the making of each and every part of this projector.

THE improvements made in the motiograph machine in the past few years have been of such importance as to commend it to the careful consideration of exhibitors throughout the country. Any one interested can secure further information by writing to the offices of the concern.

From Us to You

THE holiday season is here! To those of my correspondents who have lent me their assistance in helping me in my efforts to make the Projection Department of interest and to the readers of the Projection Department I extend my sincere wishes for a very Merry Christmas.

To the local unions throughout the United States and the individual members thereof, I wish that their working conditions, salaries and membership of their respective locals will be bettered and increased to such a degree as to give meaning to the phrase "A Happy New Year." May all of your expectations be realized and then some is the best thing the editor of this department can wish you.

"The People vs. John Doe" at the Broadway

ON Sunday evening, December 10, through the courtesy of Manager Langsfeld, of the Broadway theatre, New York, I was enabled to witness the first showing of the Universal's latest production, "The People vs. John Doe." This picture which was directed by Lois Webber, is really nothing more than a picturized account of the Steilow murder case, which has held the attention of the public for quite some time.

Presented under the auspices of the Humanitarian Cult of which Micha Applebaum is the founder and leader, it will no doubt go a long way toward abolishing the death penalty in our State, for it is a wonderful portrayal of the abuses to which the so-called "third degree" has been put as well as the, in many cases, unjust conviction of a person through "circumstantial evidence."

Annual Ball of Local 384

ON Thursday, December 7, Grand View Auditorium, Jersey City, N. J., formed the setting for one of the most enjoyable affairs held at that hall this season, the occasion being the Third Annual Ball of the Motion Picture Machine Operators of Hudson County, N. J., Local 384, I. A. T. S. E., of which my old friends Walter A. Bemis and Edward W. Bordmann, are respectively president and secretary-treasurer.

The invitation extended to the editor was one of the won't-take-no-for-an-answer kind, and even though I had made a previous engagement, not knowing at the time it was made that my dates were going to become mixed, I did manage to be in attendance, although regretting that I was unable to remain longer for which I offer my apologies to the "boys" of 384. Having been delegated to meet Brother F. H. Richardson and give him safe conduct to the hall, I was at the Hoboken station of the Tube at 9.30 P.M., and when shortly after 10 "Rich" loomed up like the Woolworth Building at night (all lit up with his open face suit) a sigh of thankfulness went up to think that my vigil was over.

Boarding one of the Public Service Pullmans we made our way to the hall and found that a large crowd had already taken possession, and the hour was still early, for the theatres had not yet disgorged the operators who were impatiently waiting to flash the "Good night" slide on their respective screens.

William Ebenau, floor manager, assisted by Louis Ulffers, were acquitting themselves nobly in taking care of the crowd, while Brothers Anthony Boscarelli and Walter Kolbenheyer were doing yeoman duty as the Reception Committee.

With Fred Stoffregen, secretary-treasurer of Local 306, pulling an arm and Bemis pulling on the other, I was sure that I was in the hands of my enemies. Stoffregen was urging me to "come on over to Brooklyn," while Bemis was insistent that I remain until the grand march. A compromise was effected whereby I was to be permitted to leave as soon as the march was over, and as "Sister" Tapley, under the escort of Brother Edward Dougherty, arrived at the hall at that moment, having journeyed in from Philadelphia where she had delivered that day four lectures, I was called upon to introduce her to the "movie fans."

First, introducing Brother Richardson, "Sister" Tapley was introduced and an explanation made as to how she came to be "one of us," having been made a member by Local 244, Newark, N. J. "Sister" Tapley rendered a recitation that was well received after which the order was given for the formation of the grand march, which was led by Sister Rose Tapley and F. H. Richardson, followed by I. G. Sherman, past president of the local (that's us) and Mrs. Sherman, Walter A. Bemis, president, and wife, Harvey Sapp, vice-president, and (intended) wife, Edward W. Bordmann, secretary-treasurer, and wife, and the other members of the executive board as well as the various committee members. The colored lights thrown upon the marchers lent a most beautiful effect and caused much comment.

A large bouquet of flowers was presented to each of the first twelve ladies in the march, which they carried home as souvenirs of an enjoyable evening. Dodging Stoffregen and Bemis (and other things), as I was, it was impossible to secure the names of the notable guests of the evening, but among those present were Dr. H. Charles Hespe, president of the Hudson County Exhibitors League; William C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company; Joseph Haunstein, general manager of the Picture Theatre Equipment Co. (who would not let us forget it); David Narcey, of the Precision Machine Company, and the Messrs. Bruckner, Lavin and Abbot of the Optigraph Company, Chicago, Ill.; H. M. Davis, manager of the Unicorn Film Company, and numerous others whose names lack of space prevents me from publishing.

Taken all in all the ball was a high success, it being estimated that over one thousand were in attendance, and the credit for this is due mainly to the efforts of the following committees: Arrangement committee: Edward W. Bordmann, chairman; Conrad Daubener, Jr., Jack Hertner, Louis Ulffers, William Meyer, Harvey Sapp, Edward Dougherty, William Ebenau. Reception committee: Anthony Boscarelli and Walter Kolbenheyer.

The officers of the local are: W. A. Bemis, president; Harvey Sapp, vice-president; E. W. Bordmann, secretary-treasurer; Conrad Daubener, Jr., recording secretary; John Giles, sergeant-at-arms, and Frank Kirschgessner, Edward Dougherty and C. H. Ingersoll, trustees.

AS we live, we learn—as we learn, we advance—advancement means we are moving with present day developments.

SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS were conceived by Mr. J. S. Speer, better known as the "Carbon King," and assisted by an able corps of engineers and carbon experts, they have been developed—improved—bettered—perfected, until today they are unsurpassed in quality or service.

EXPERIMENTS were made; tests conducted; carbon manufactured and the entire idea fostered several years ago. The great European War, however, placed the motion picture industry on the brink of despair. The situation became serious—immediate action was necessary—SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS saved the day.

TO relieve this alarming condition, a new factory had to be erected, special machinery designed, inexperienced hands employed, and the carbons placed upon the market within a few months.

CONDITIONS such as these left little time for refinement, polish or elegance. Quality was established from the first, but the smaller details had to be left for a later day development.

NOT content to manufacture a carbon that would satisfy,—but rather one that would delight, the faithful employees of the Speer Plant have worked unceasingly to show "class" in the goods they are turning out.

THEIR efforts were not in vain—the advancement is most pleasing—operators attest the improvement and delight in the results obtained.

FURTHER explanation is not necessary. Each carbon is our reputation in itself. Ask the operator who uses them, or conduct experiments for yourself.

WE welcome just comparisons with other carbons, the results increase the orders received in our daily mail.

Fred K. Weiser, Stonington, Ill. One 6B Power's machine.

Charles Berry, Reed City, Mich. Power's 6A machine complete.

Theo. Habers, Lexington, Va. New Power's 6B with inductor.

And the Nicholas Power Company also quote a list too numerous to mention, the latest installation being two motor driven Power's 6B Cameragraphs in the new U. S. theatre, owned and operated by the Big Three Amusement Company, at 195th street and Webster avenue, Bronx, New York.

Size Wire for 60 Volt Generator

J. A. Smith, Belle Haven, Virginia, writes: "We are installing one of the Hobart Brothers Arc Generators and will have some located about 100 feet from picture machine. The Generator is a 60-volt one and what we want to know is: What size wire should we use from Generator to picture machine.

"Please inform me through the columns of the NEWS as soon as possible as I am expecting the Generator every day.

"Another question that has been perplexing me is this: I have a light spot on my pictures, appearing on the right side, about four feet in height by two feet in width which makes a glimmer at times. Can you inform me the cause, and the remedy?"

Answer: You too fail to give complete data, making it rather difficult for me to answer your question. Not knowing the capacity of this type of Generator in amperes, but presuming that it is to deliver 40 amperes and is to be used only for the motion picture arc, I should think a number 6 wire would meet your requirements. You understand, of course, that it is necessary to use a rheostat in series to reduce the voltage to normal arc voltage, otherwise the generator which has a capacity much greater than the arc amperage would become short circuited when the carbons were brought together to start the arc.

I would like further information from you concerning this type generator, who it is made by and where they are located, and with more complete data on the capacity of the generator I may be able to be of greater assistance.

This applies also to your second question. Describe the light spot more fully, and just what effect the "glimmer" has. Will await your reply before making any further suggestions.

Motion Picture Apparatus Company Moves Uptown

The coming of the new year will see the Motion Picture Apparatus Company, well-known dealers in motion picture cameras, in their new place of business, located at 110 West Thirty-second street. The former headquarters of the Motion Picture Apparatus Company, at 810 Broadway, is known to all film producers, as is also their manager, Mr. R. Hastings.

Mr. Hastings is well known to all camera men, laboratory superintendents and studio managers in the vicinity of Greater New York, and the representative stock of cinematographic cameras and laboratory machinery stocked by the Motion Picture Apparatus Company has been largely responsible for the growth of this firm's businss. Moving to the Thirty-second street address brings the Motion Picture Apparatus Company considerably closer to the headquatrers of the various film producers, and all customers of this concern will be more than delighted at what they see when they visit Mr. Hastings at the new store.

Perfect Arc Control

F. H. Richardson, well-known authority on motion picture equipment says of the

TransVerteR

TRADE MARK. REGISTERED. U. S. PAT. OFF. JULY 25, 1916.

While in Cleveland I witnessed a remarkable demonstration of the ability of this machine to maintain constant current at variable arc voltage. We set the arc working at 50 volts, 50 amperes * * * there was no appreciable change at all in the amperes until the voltage had mounted to 80, whereupon I turned the arc to, amazing as the statement may seem, approximately 1¼" in length without the slightest change taking place in the amperage delivery, and the arc did not break. * * *

"Although there were two perfect arcs and the illumination was not appreciably affected on the first machine, still the ammeter read 50 amperes, so that we had two arcs, each drawing 50 amperes, with a generator only furnishing a total of 50, and with an arc voltage at either machine of 50. * * *

"I can recommend the Transverter to the careful consideration of the moving picture theatre manager and operator."

Can you do this with your present equipment? If not, you should not be satisfied. Send for descriptive literature and latest price bulletin.

Novel and Inexpensive Slide Writer

E. M. FULTON, of the E. E. Fulton Company, Chicago, Ill., whom I had the pleasure of meeting while in that city this summer, has submitted to the Department a number of appliances to be used in the operating room that will make the work of the operator less irksome, one of them is known as the "Fulco" Slide Writer, which consists of a hardwood frame to which is attached a celluloid stencil plate having 160 small oblong openings. Underneath this stencil plate there is an opening, recessed so as to receive the cover glass of a slide which is held in place by two removable spring slips.

The cover glass, having been previously coated with a suitable slide compound, is inserted in the frame under the stencil and may be written upon by means of a sharp pointed stylus (which is included with the outfit). The stencil plate serves as a guide, thus keeping all letters of a uniform size and in perfect alignment.

Shackleton Endorses Power's Cameragraph

The Nicholas Power Company have been the recipients of a number of testimonials, gold medals and grand prizes in recognition of the superiority of their Cameragraph Projecting Machine, but the letter recently received by that company from their representative at Valparaiso, Chile, enclosing a voluntary endorsement from Sir Ernest H. Shackleton, the famous South Pole explorer, has justly given the Power Company reason to feel highly gratified. The text of the letter from Sir Ernest is as follows:

"I thank you for installing the Power Cameragraph for my lecture in Valparaiso, and am pleased to state that throughout the course of my lectures, which number over 700, I have not seen clearer or more efficient projection.

(Signed) "E. H. SHACKLETON."

The Nicholas Power Company have been exporting their Cameragraph to Latin America for several years, and are unusually busy just now with this particular branch of their business, which continues increasing with the growing popularity in that section of the 6B machine.

THE AMERICAN STANDARD MASTER - 1917 - MODEL

Why? First, because the STANDARD mechanism is made of bigger and better parts, yet there are fewer of them. Breakdowns, excessive repairs, are practically banished. Second, the PERFECT design and construction make the STANDARDS long wearing, no matter how hard you work them. STANDARDS eight and nine and ten years old are found to work as good as when first installed, the record of cost for repair parts summing up but a few dollars.

The new Master-1917-Model is a marvel. Added to the traditional good STANDARD points are scores of others; you will appreciate the new improvements that make for greater ease in operation and more perfect work on the screen. THE NEW STANDARD MOTOR SPEED CONTROL is a device we must mention in this limited space. This is a small, certain, mechanical attachment that can be used with any constant speed motor and enables a 1000-ft. reel to be run as fast as eight minutes and as slow as twenty-two.

THE CAMERA

Studio Lights

ALTHOUGH the utmost capabilities of the motion camera are, as yet, far from being attained, advances are constantly being made in the artistic and scientific quality of cinematography and a degree of realism which would have been considered impossible some few years ago is now apparent in the films of the large producers, while film makers of the better class are constantly striving to add to their achievements along this line.

With competent camera manipulation it is, of course, not difficult to truthfully render an exterior view, but the natural representation of an "interior" or studio scene depends upon numerous factors not the least of which is the quality of the illumination used.

Daylight, while possessing highly desirable qualities for photographic purposes, is extremely variable in its intensity, which fact is responsible for the development of some highly efficient photographic lamps and "lighting systems" for use when working in studios or indoors. The improvements in motion picture studio lighting have kept pace with the improvements in cameras, film stock and laboratory procedure and a description of some of the various types of lamps used in present day studio work will probably prove of interest and value to readers of the Camera Department.

Of all artificial illuminants used in photographic work one of the best known and most widely used is the Cooper Hewitt Mercury Vapor Lamp, made by the Cooper Hewitt Electric Company, Eighth and Grand streets, Hoboken, N. J. This light is the invention of Dr. Peter Cooper Hewitt, and immediately after its appearance (in 1901) the value of its peculiar greenish blue rays became apparent to photographers. Thus in 1903 we find some Cooper Hewitt tubes installed in the old Biograph studio on Fourteenth street, New York, this company being the first motion picture concern to equip a studio with artificial lights.

As used in motion picture production, the unit of Cooper Hewitt lighting is a bank or frame containing eight mercury-vapor tubes, each having a length of 50 inches. There are two principal forms in which these units are mounted—the floor-stand and the skylight frame. The floor-stand consists of a base (on rollers) which carries a metal frame on which a bank of eight tubes is mounted. The bank of lights is hinged to the frame in such a way that it may be inclined to any desired angle and raised or lowered for use as a toplight or side light. The skylight-frame is a bank of eight tubes designed to be suspended from above in such a way as to throw the light downwards, and is an important item in studio equipment, as toplighting plays an important part in securing good interior photography.

There has also been introduced by the Cooper Hewitt Company another type of floor-stand called the Elevator Stand with wings, as shown in Fig. 1. This equipment, containing 17 tubes is similar in appearance to a combination floor-stand and skylight. It has this advantage, that the bank of lights may be elevated and tipped forward over 11-foot scenery—thus serving as a toplight. According to our experience the best results are not obtained by relying solely on these elevator stands for the overhead lighting; there should also be some of the regulation skylight-frames suspended over the set, but the elevator stand is a mighty useful adjunct to the equipment of a modern studio, as it eliminates the trolley system.

The greenish blue color of the rays emitted by the Cooper Hewitt tube as has been previously alluded to has its high actinic value. Now while not strictly monochromatic the mercury-vapor tube, when used plain or with a white reflector (such as the banks of lights are regularly equipped with) transmits no red rays. As a natural consequence all red objects appear black under such illumination and the appearance of objects of many other colors is also altered. This is no drawback in most branches of motion picture work, but the Cooper Hewitt Company have devised a transformer which greatly improves the rendition of colors—this being in the form of special red reflectors which fluoresce under the action of the rays from the mercury tubes and gives the effect of some red rays being included in the light emitted.

By reason of their being in the form of long tubes and mounted together in banks four feet by five feet in area, a fine distribution of light is possible with Cooper Hewitts and for this reason they are considered a highly efficient form of studio illumination, approaching best daylight conditions.

Another style of light which early came into consideration for the equipment of motion picture studios was the Aristo Arc made by the American

Aristotype Company of Jamestown, N. Y. Although popular in the film studios for many years the Aristo is not met with so often now, but a similar style of hanging arc lamp—the Majestic—has come into prominence within recent years. The Majestic Arc lamp is manufactured by Sweet Wallach and Company of Chicago, Ill., and an idea of its appearance may be gathered from Fig. 2.

When used as toplights these Majestic Arcs are suspended in rows above a set, while for use as side lights they are supplied (with aluminum reflectors) on adjustable floor-stands so that they may be raised to any desired height. These arcs are connected in series with a special starting resistance and yield a flaming and highly actinic violet ray. If a diffused illumination is required the globes enclosing the carbons may be obtained with a frosted (ground glass) finish. Cameramen are well aware of the high actinicity of the illumination from a properly designed arc light, so the popularity of the Majestic Arc for studio work is not surprising.

Quite different from the two lamps previously described is the "Panchroma" Twin Arc Lamp, manufactured by the Allison & Hadaway Corporation of 235 Fifth avenue, New York, this firm being the originators of the portable studio arc. The Panchroma Arc, being readily transportable, a director is able, with the aid of a few of these lamps, to take scenes in dwellings, mines, hotels and other places where it would be otherwise impossible to secure a correctly exposed negative.

In designing the Panchroma lamp a steady illumination of great intensity was aimed for and anyone who has seen this light in use must admit that this end has been attained. Small as these lamps are, the volume of light thrown by one is enormous, while the steady burning of two arcs is achieved by an ingenious compensating device on the top carbon holders which serves to maintain an even feed if one pair of carbons burns away more rapidly than does the other.

Mr. Allison, being an ardent color photographer, lays great stress upon the ability of a studio lamp to preserve the integrity of coloring in the scene which is being photographed. To that end he caused a series of experiments to be undertaken in order to determine what particular carbon would best fulfill this requirement, and as a result the Panchroma lamp when used with the carbons supplied by its makers will be found to give the best rendition of colors possible with a photographic arc light when using ordinary negative film stock.

For use in the film studio a special lamp, shown in Figure 3, has just been introduced by Messrs. Allison and Hadaway. This lamp called the Panchroma Model T B is a combination of their well known Top-Light with another Panchroma unit for side lighting. As will be seen in the illustration, the two lights are combined on a roller stand which may be easily moved around the studio. A chain and counterweight are attached to the lamps and by moving the chain up or down the lamps may be quickly adjusted to any desired height.

Due to their great portability, combined with other desirable features, the Panchroma lamps have become very popular and it is rare, indeed, to find a studio which does not include as part of its lighting equipment some portable Panchroma arc lamps.

Among the various firms who have given consideration to the photographic lighting equipment of the film studio, none has been more progressive than M. J. Wohl and Company of 207 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. The Wohl concern, which specializes in complete studio equipments, has developed a large line of extremely efficient photographic lamps, all employing the carbon arc. Foremost among the lamps made by this concern is the "Broadside" shown in Fig. 4. The Broadside is a side light consisting of four arcs in a special reflecting chamber, mounted on a floor-stand, and constitutes one of the most powerful light sources known to the film producer.

For top-lighting Wohl and Company supply an enclosed arc of hanging type known as the "Duplex." The Duplex arc in addition to being used for top-lighting is supplied by its makers mounted, singly or in pairs, on floor-stands and with reflectors of various shapes. It will therefore be seen that while the "Broadside" is the lamp for powerful illumination, the "Duplex" is the lamp for general utility.

To secure the best effect when using arc lights (of all types) in photography, it is found necessary to soften or diffuse the light by placing some diffusing medium in front of the lamp. Prismatized and ground glass are used with good effect for this purpose, but the considerable heat of the arc craters tends to crack these glass diffusing strips in short order. Realizing this Wohl and Company have perfected a translucent fabric of woven glass which is mounted in frames and placed in front of the lamp hood in the customary way. This fabric diffuses the illumination in a manner equal to the best results ever attained with ground glass, and will stand the temperature of any arc without cracking.

Actinic quality, that all important desideratum in a photographic light, has been thoroughly considered by the Wohl concern and the illumination secured with Wohl arcs, in addition to being powerful, is possessed of all qualities which appeal to the cinematographer.

Another studio arc-lamp of established popularity and proven performance is the "Klieglight," or as popularly termed in studios the "Klieg." This lamp, made by the Universal Electric Stage Lighting Company (Kliegl Bros.) of 240 West 50th street, New York, is the product of a firm who have been builders of stage lamps and theatrical illuminating devices for many years and the Klieglight embodies the knowledge gained in years of arc-light construction.

This lamp consists of two arcs (4 carbons) connected in series. They are fed automatically and with great steadiness, means being provided for compensating any difference in the rate at which the carbons of the respective arcs are consumed. The arcs are encased in a reflecting hood, which in turn is mounted to a pedestal or floor-stand. The lamp may be raised or lowered to convenient working height by means of a small winch (crank and ratchet wheel) and a steel cable attached to the hool. At the bottom of the stand is the resistance through which the lamps are fed and the Klieglight may be used at amperages ranging from 20 to 35 on 110 volt current.

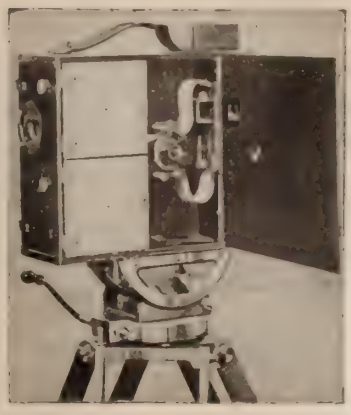
Although of rugged construction Klieglights may be readily moved or transported about and by reason of their powerful illuminating properties are much in demand by directors. Kliegl Bros. do not confine themselves to the production of the single lamp, for, in addition, they can supply double floor-stands (Fig. 5) top lights consisting of the arcs and reflecting hood (designed to be suspended from above) and a smaller lamp, the "Liliput."

The Kliegl Liliput is a portable twin arc lamp of light weight and excellent mechanical finish. It is mounted on a telescopic iron stand permitting it to be quickly raised, lowered or dismounted and gives an intense and steady illumination. In common with other properly designed arc-lamps of this type the difference in rate of carbon consumption between the two arcs is compensated for by an efficient mechanical arrangement attached to the carbon holders.

For diffusing the very intense illumination thrown by their various types of lamps the Kliegl concern supply frames containing strips of prismatized glass. These are inserted in grooves at the front of the lamp hood after the manner of inserting sheets of colored gelatine in front of a stage spot lamp.

It is not necessary to eulogize the Klieglight here as these lamps have an established reputation among film producers large and small.

Although the majority of the lamps previously considered in the course of our article have been arc-lights, in one form or another, we have next to consider a photographic light of radically different nature—the "Photolite"—made by the Sterling Electric Lamp Division of the General Electric Company at Warren, Ohio.



The Photolite is a high-powered nitogrogen filled Mazda globe —a typical example of the great advance made in incandescent electric lighting in recent years. On account of the great brilliancy of these globes when lighted, it has been found advisable, in order to eliminate eyestrain, to enclose the filament in a globe of blue colored glass—hence these lights are frequently termed "Blue Mazdas" or "Blue Nitrogen" lamps. Now it might seem that this blue colored globe would rob the resultant illumination of its ability to correctly define colors, but such is not the case to any appreciable extent, for as a matter of fact the Photolite leads all others in preserving the color values of the objects to be photographed, and the use of this light will permit of a more nearly orthochromatic rendition than any other photographic lamp.

The Photolite is rather lower in efficiency than the other lamps which we have considered, however, showing less candlepower per watt than does the average arc or the mercury vapor tube. These Blue Mazda globes may be secured in 1000- and 1500-watt size and are used in conjunction with white enameled pressed steel reflectors. The Photolites may be mounted in rows for overhead lighting and on floor stands in a variety of styles to secure any desired distribution or concentration of the light. They are less expensive than other types of lamps and by reason of their excellent rendition of colors are especially to be recommended for use in surgical and scientific cinematography.

As a result of the knowledge gained by catering to the photographic profession for some years, the Simplex Photo Products Company of Morris Park, L. I., have introduced a studio arc-lamp of the portable type known as the "Northern Light." The Northern Light, shown in Fig. 6, first appeared about a year ago and is an extremely compact twin arc of great illuminating power. These Northern Lights are supplied in several models to operate at different amperages. The No. 1 lamp operates at 15 amperes, while the No. 2 operates at 25 amperes, and of course produces an increased volume of light. In common with most other photographic arcs the Northern Light is designed to operate on both direct and alternating current. To secure the steadiest result on either form of current supply the Northern Light is supplied with separate resistance and feed windings with a special connecting socket (suitably marked) for each. When the plug attached to the feed cable is connected to the proper socket a highly actinic light of great intensity is produced. The illumination produced by the Northern Light is especially rich in violet white rays which have the greatest effect on photographic emulsions. According to the makers close-ups have been photographed using only one 15 Ampere lamp and well exposed negatives secured, the lens being worked "wide open."

In describing the high quality which has been attained in cinematographic studio lighting we must, for the sake of completeness, set forth the valuable assistance rendered the various makers of photographic arc-lamps by the National Carbon Company of Cleveland, Ohio.

Appreciating that a refined and high grade carbon is necessary for use in studio arc lamps the Research Laboratory of the National Carbon Company has perfected a line of carbons for such purposes which leave little to be desired. Whether it be a highly actinic ray or a quality of illumination suitable for the high class rendition of colors the National is able to supply the proper carbon. Among the grades of carbons specially recommended for photographic work by the National Carbon Company are their Snowwhite, Pearlwhite, Yellow Flame and Red Flame carbons. By using these carbons or suitable combinations of the same, any desired brilliancy or degree of color rendition may be produced with any of the arc-lamps described in this article, and the makers of the various photographic arc-lamps have found the Research Department of the National Carbon Company always ready to cooperate with them on the subject of improved artificial illumination for the motion picture studio.

In the foregoing paragraphs we have endeavored to set forth the improvements in cinematographic studio lighting which have materialized in recent years, and it will be apparent, we believe, that the manufacturers of photographic lights and studio lighting systems are doing their share toward improving the quality of cinematographic results.

In a future issue we shall go more deeply into this interesting subject of studio illumination, describing and illustrating the manner of mounting and arranging the various types of lamps in order to produce the most evenly distributed illumination, and hence the most pleasing results.

Light Flashes

R. W. B., Olean, N. Y., writes: I am coming to you for assistance. There are flashes of white on my screen that I do not understand. It does not make any difference at what speed I run my machine, though it is more noticeable when running at high speed, the flashes are still there. Am using a Powers 6-A with a two wing shutter. Current is 60 amperes A. C., projection lens 4½ inch E. P., throw 60 feet.

Answer: Apparently you are troubled with "travel ghost." This may be caused by your shutter blade being too narrow, or it may be that the gears have become badly worn allowing too much play in the shutter shaft. If there is no play in the shutter shaft and the shutter is properly set, it should, if it is the correct width, eliminate all travel ghost.

A good way to determine the correct shutter width is to take a piece of cardboard and cut out a shutter blade the same diameter as the one you are using, making the main blade somewhat wider than your present one. Then setting this in the usual way cut off the edges of the main blade until only a slight travel ghost is noticeable, then by adding a thin strip of metal, which may be soldered on to the main blade and which may be about 1-16th of an inch wider than the cardboard pattern, if needed.

If you try to get rid of the travel ghost, and your machine has badly worn gears by making the shutter blade wide enough to cut out the ghost, the chances are that you will cut too great a percentage of light as well as develop an objectionable flicker. If the suggestions made do not remedy your trouble, would suggest that you write me again or send to the Nicholas Power Company for the proper width of shutter to be used with the size of lens you are using on a throw of 60 feet.

TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY:

Congratulations upon the progress made during 1916!

The organization of the industry for the promotion of economy and efficiency in all departments—for the betterment of the relations between the various branches of the industry; and for defense from unjust attack is now assured.

Our appreciation of the orders which have come to us—from our old friends—as an evidence of their satisfaction; from new customers—as an evidence of their belief in the superiority of our product. Taken together these orders far exceed in volume those of other years.

OUR POLICY. In the manufacture of motion picture machinery—to add to painstaking study and experiment in design, all the advantage which may be gained through the use of good materials—the application of skilled workmanship. To design and build for durability and efficiency in order that the high quality and great volume of the output may insure low manufacturing costs. To recognize that the machines used in the making and showing of motion pictures are interdependent and so to standardize our product by causing the gauge of film perforation established by our perforating machine to govern the specifications to which we construct the film movement mechanisms of camera and printer—the only effective way to secure the film control and accuracy of register in photography and printing which are necessary to the making of the finest pictures.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT. We have completed the designing and development of certain machines which will greatly increase the efficiency of the manufacturing processes of the industry. Definite statements concerning them will be made early in 1917.

Other important developments are being carried forward as rapidly as is consistent with the high standard set for our product.

Contracts have been let and machinery ordered which will provide for a 50 per cent increase in our manufacturing space and equipment.

A PLEDGE. To use our best endeavors—to expend time, money and engineering skill—in the effort to keep our products abreast of the growing demands—the imperative needs of the industry. And when opportunity offers to point the way—to provide the means—to higher efficiency, greater economy and the production of more artistic pictures.

All this to the end that we may advance the interests of a great industry of which we are proud to be a part—that we may continue to deserve and enjoy the confidence and support of the men who are seeking to make that industry second to none in its character, its aims and its achievements.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Romantic and Dramatic Motion Picture Situations

THE film director, unfortunately, does not as a rule consider music in "assembling" his pictures; hence it is all the more necessary for the musical leader to consider the pictures in adapting his music, on the principle that "Since the mountain did not come to Mohammed, Mohammed went to the mountain." Romantic and dramatic photoplay situations are in the most cases either psychic (emotional, without much action), or physical (in which emotion is expressed in movement).

In "romantic" situations, where love, hatred, anxiety, despair, horror, ecstasy, etc., are shown by facial registration and with little or no body movement, dramatic mæstosos, lentos, adagios or andantes are best employed; while in scenes of physical violence or agitation, bodily struggles, encounters, etc., agitatos, "hurries" and furios are the proper musical mediums of expression.

In both "love scenes" and fighting "scenes" absolute synchronization, it need hardly be said, is a first requisite. In the last-named fifteen second "let downs," with only a dynamic change in the music are often decidedly effective.

Music can properly interpret and emphasize practically every human emotion portrayed in the photoplay. And it is the place of the orchestra leader to immediately recognize the dramatic musical possibilities of a picture and to "augment and support them through the medium of his art."

The leader who is content to select a musical number more or less appropriate and merely "time" it through is, nine cases out of ten, losing admirable chances of intelligent synchronization of music and pictures. And in the love scene and action drama in particular the right music, rightly presented, is of the greatest importance in making the emotions registered in the films "get over" to the audience, and in winning their interest and appreciation.

Pyle Has Busy Time in East

Charles C. Pyle, general sales agent, Bartola Musical Instrument Company, who has been spending the last two weeks in New York and Philadelphia, came East to attend the opening of the Poplar theatre, Sixth and Poplar streets, Philadelphia, Pa. This theatre is built and owned by Mr. A. Stiefel, has a seating capacity of 1,000, and is up to date in every respect. They have installed a $6,000 Bartola musical instrument, and the opening, from both a musical and financial standpoint, was very successful.

During Mr. Pyle's stay in Philadelphia, he assisted the Eastern representative, Mr. John F. Grady, in obtaining new contracts for his company.

The trip was very successful from the fact that he sold Mr. Michael Stiefel a $10,000 Bartola De Luxe for the Iris theatre, 3146 Kensington avenue, Philadelphia, and a $6,000 Grand Special Bartola for the Lafayette theatre, 2914 Kensington avenue, Philadelphia.

Mr. Pyle states that the Bartola business for the past year has doubled over the year previous, necessitating the factory to greatly increase their output, and predicts that next year will be even far more successful. The Bartola is supplanting a great many human orchestras all over the country and has proven a wonderful success because it is a combination of a straight pipe organ and orchestra.

Still, you need a thoroughly efficient operator. His position is analogous to that of the chauffeur, who also has little to do,—but, he must keep his eyes on the road, avoid accidents, and correct little faults before they grow. So with the operator; his position should be one of guidance, correction and supervision of the apparatus placed in his care, and his greatest interest should be in the result on the screen.

He should be the most critical man in the house and should detect and correct any flaw in the picture before it becomes a permanent damage and an expense to his boss. He cannot do that while he is working with his hands.

Intelligent supervision over efficient equipment is the only combination that will produce perfect results on the screen. Remember the manufacturers are working for the best interests of these results and their labors should be given the trial which they deserve—don't turn a thing down because it costs money. Very truly yours, MIDDLE WESTERNER.

Let's think this letter over, for it hits the pocket-book of every exhibitor. "Nothing succeeds like success," yet success in the big sense will only come to the exhibitor who will give his patron something better than the man up the street can give. Take advantage of improvements—see that your operator is on the job—help him by giving him the best equipment—realize that his work means success or failure to any house—for with poor results on the screen, you can't hope to fool your patrons for any great length of time.

YOU who read this must have suggestions along this and other lines. Send them in and help the industry by giving it the advantage of your experience—"KEEP THE BALL ROLLING." E. K. GILLETT.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

New Strand, Livingston, Montana, Fine Structure

THE New Strand theatre, Livingston, Montana, is a fine example of the Northwest's rapidly increasing family of motion picture theatres de luxe.

As one walks up Second street he is impressed with the massive size of the Strand theatre, which extends from the street entirely to the alley. As he notes the copper-frame and glass marquette extending over the street he becomes impressed with the beauty of the place. Entering the lobby the impressions of beauty and size, comfort and convenience are magnified and emphasized. A thorough inspection of the place, witnessing the performance, and the taking of mental notes of the features of ventilation and lighting result in a thorough conviction that here in Livingston the Strand theatre takes rank as the very finest in the entire Northwest, superior to any motion picture house anywhere in the entire United States for the size of the city, and as up-to-date, equipped with as modern apparatus and as clean, neat, attractive and artistic as any in any city, and surpassed in the largest cities in the world only in size.

The Big Features

Among the features of the Strand are the wonderful pipe organ, two manual and echo, the automatic fire control booth, the vanishing lighting system, the motor-driven ventilating system and the comfortable seats and artistic color scheme throughout.

Entering the lobby one notices the sunlight effect created by concealed electric lights. The lobby is flooded with the artificial sunlight. To the right is the box office, where the ticket seller finds herself surrounded with pleasant chairs, telephone, mirror and other conveniences for herself. The lobby floor is of tiling, slanting slightly towards the theatre auditorium. Two massive oak doors with beveled glass windows let the crowd into and out of the theatre.

The Foyer

The foyer is a beautiful place, elegant yet quiet. On the floor a thick blue velvet carpet. The walls of tiffany decorations in the panels, with blue curtains at the entrance arches to the boxes. A sanitary marble drinking fountain runs constantly. A men's and ladies' toilet rooms are located on either side. In the ladies' room is a dressing table and mirror. A pretty writing table and chair furnish a comfortable place to write a note on engraved stationery. Easy chairs are placed invitingly about the foyer. Blue predominates in the foyer, with a pink tint used sparingly and attractively for contrast.

The Auditorium

Be seated in the auditorium. Take any one of the 750 chairs and comfort awaits you. The generous seat is covered with leather bottom, well padded. The back is finished with plush, preferred to leather on account of its warmth and comfort. First of all, your eyes notice the attractive stage setting. There is the special design, made expressly for a picture show house. The ceiling is finished in blue, and, illuminated, gives a quiet, restful, comforting moonlight effect. To the right of the curtain is the parlor. It is a beautiful and attractive scene, equaling the garden scene on the left. Thus sitting before the pictures one imagines himself witnessing a moonlight scene, with the parlor and garden at opposite sides.

Pink predominates in the pretty auditorium. The ceiling is thirty-two feet high and the panels on either side of the walls are tinted in the pretty, pleasing pink. The indirect lighting system is used. There are forty-eight of the 60-watt lights on the ceiling alone.

The Lights Vanish

As the overture on the massive pipe organ nears the end, the lights throughout the auditorium commence to vanish. The room becomes darker and darker, and slowly the curtain rises and the pictures begin to reveal themselves. Slowly and almost imperceptibly the change is made and the pictures are taking the place of the lighted room.

From one reel to the other the audience knows not the change. The two machines are employed to make continuous action and there is not a moment's wait between reels.

Absolutely Fireproof

Rest quietly, for there is no danger from fire. The dread experienced in many show houses lest the films catch fire and burn the theatre need not be felt at the Strand. Six solid inches of concrete are between you and danger. Suppose a film caught fire at the Strand. Instantly a film fuse stretched immediately above the machine would burn. Immediately this fuse would release an automatic attachment and a No. 16 gauge iron door or shutter would close tightly. The machine booth then would be nothing but a furnace. The smoke or blaze would be fanned by air admitted from the outside through a chimney built from the booth. The booth would be in no more danger than a furnace in the home. There would be the draft to force the fire up the chimney and not even the smoke would or could escape into the building.

If the operator were present he would simply leave the booth and return after the film had burned, to find everything in perfect condition except a destroyed reel. If he were absent, the automatic attachments would work exactly as though he were there, and again nothing and nobody would be endangered.

In the booth is a telephone connecting with all parts of the theatre. The machinery consists of two of the latest model Simplex machines, motor driven, with the latest lighting device known for picture projection, called a transverter.

The ventilation consists of two three-horsepower motors. There are five outlets for the foul air and two intakes, where the fresh air is forced in by the motors. In the winter the fresh air is heated by an immense radiator as it enters the auditorium.

The wonderful pipe organ, played by that artist, Mrs. White, forms a combination which delights and charms all. The organ is one manufactured by the W. W. Kimball Company of Chicago, and when one considers that it took twelve men an entire day to simply unload the organ from the car, and that it has taken an expert from the factory, H. M. Hansen, three weeks, with the help of an assistant, to install it, the size and wonder of the organ are partly realized.

The organ is known as a two manual and pedal, with echo instrument. While the instrument proper is installed at the front of the theatre, on either side of the stage, with the keyboard in the orchestra pit, the echo attachment is a huge affair, placed at the rear of the building. The electric wires from the keyboard extend 140 feet to the echo, yet the response is just as prompt as the response of the piano when the key is touched.

Three rows of keys, with a row of foot pedals, are used. Three to four different combinations of sounds and effects are produced with each of the multitude of keys. There is the cello, flute de amour, concert flute, muted violin and the foundation tone, as well as the bass violin in the main organ. The echo organ produces the concert flute and vox humani or human voice effects. The massive shutters in the organ cause the sound to decrease or increase. The instrument is one of the finest made and the effects are beautiful, pleasing to the ear and in some instances even startling. Livingston is fortunate in having such an artist as Mrs. White to play the instrument. She studied under some of the best teachers in Paris, including Prof. Gilmore and thoroughly understands every phase of the instrument, capable of producing such a multitude of effects and tones.

The chairs, the furnishings, the color, schemes and decorative ideas were all purchased or planned by Mr. and Mrs. White. The Sound Construction Company of Seattle erected the building and carried out the ideas of the architect and the manager. It was through the belief of Hon. A. W. Miles in the future of Livingston that this city is privileged to have such a grand structure. It might be considered the climax of all his generous and liberal plans for the upbuilding of Livingston.

Mr. White likewise had faith in the future of the city and leased the building and furnished it. He has contracted for the best film service he could secure, and with the music of the great pipe organ, with the highest class pictures, with perfect ventilation and heating systems, with the service and treatment of the best, he believes that the people of the city and county and the thousands of tourists who each month visit the city will support such a house.

Premier Sign Company Opens Offices in Heart of Film District

PREMIER SIGN COMPANY is now located in the heart of the New York film district. New offices have been opened at 138 West Forty-sixth street, just a few doors from the Leavitt Building.

This concern is under the management of Mr. Davis, who is putting forth every effort to satisfy the exhibitors' need in hand-painted posters and streamers.

Mr. Davis is contemplating building up a large mail order business on the company's various products.

Attractive Interior of City Hall Theatre, Park Row, New York.

New T. and D. Theatre a Marvel of Comfort

THE Turner and Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco has closed the T. and D. Photoplay Theatre at Oakland, California, and has opened a magnificent new house at Franklin and Eleventh streets, which is one of the largest theatres on the Pacific Coast. The building and equipment represents an investment of more than $400,000, and the house was erected solely for photoplays, the stage being too small for the presentation of dramatic productions or vaudeville.

The structure covers a ground area of one hundred by one hundred and seventy-five feet and is occupied entirely by the theare, although space has been left on the Eleventh street side for candy booths and stores. Both within and without the design of the building shows the influence of the recent exposition at San Francisco. The illuminated vases from which issue jets of steam, located along the north side of the building, the Venetian banners and many other ideas, especially in illumination, were copied from the San Francisco Exposition buildings. The seating capacity of the theatre is placed at 3,450 persons, but there is room for fully five hundred others in the several waiting rooms that have been provided.

The entrance is within a few steps of Broadway, the leading thoroughfare of Oakland, and is brilliantly illuminated. A handsome bronze marquis extends the full width of the sidewalk and on this are electric signs calling attention to the present attraction, while above is the huge vertical house sign. On the roof above the facade a huge American flag flies, while on each side of it are "T. & D." banners. The lobby is of marble and the ticket booth in the center is of marble and glass.

A marble foyer extends the full width of the theatre and the most noticeable feature of the theatre is the almost total elimination of stairs, broad inclines taking the place of these. The main incline starts from the lobby entrance and leads to a spacious mezzanine, from which smaller inclines lead to the balcony. At the head of this incline and directly over the lobby is located the ladies' tea room, while to the left is the Pompeiian waiting room and to the right the men's smoking room.

The ladies' tea room is an innovation in western theatres and is regarded by interior decorators as being the most wonderful room of its size on the Pacific Coast. In the daytime the sunshine filters through silken window draperies, while at night the illumination comes from a system of cove lighting. The walls are covered with a rich tapestry, the furniture is upholstered in a deep blue, while a carpet of the same color graces the floor. A Chinese maid will be in constant attendance here and it is planned to serve tea and ices for those who may desire to wait here for friends or until the commencement of a show. Off the tea room is a ladies' retiring room furnished as elaborately as any boudoir, with divans, dressing tables, writing desks with writing materials and telephones.

The Pompeiian room is open to both men and women and is designed as a general waiting room. Telephones are located here and there are call bells announcing the commencement of all new subjects on the screen.

The men's smoking room is furnished with heavily upholstered chairs, smoking stands and rare rugs. Special attention has been paid to its ventilation and it will never be obnoxious even to those who do not smoke.

From the mezzanine floor three entrances into the huge balcony have been provided, two at each side, which terminate at the same level, and a third which reaches it well toward the top.

The projection room, instead of being located in the balcony, as is usually the case, is on the ground floor, between the two main aisles, but even then the throw is a long one, being one hundred and thirty-three feet. The projection equipment consists of two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6 B, and these machines are presided over by Elmer E. Nichols and Irving S. Cohn.

Music is furnished by a huge Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit organ, electrically operated from the console, which is placed in the orchestra pit and has instant contact with the five main divisions—swell, great, orchestral, echo and pedal—placed at either side and above the state, in the ceiling and above the balcony. The instrument can be played either by hand or by tracker board attachment. A. H. Malotte, formerly organist at the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, is the organist.

The opera chairs which have been installed were furnished by Heywood Brothers and Wakefield Company, of San Francisco, and are equipped with spring seats with both seat and back upholstered in Spanish leather. The woodwork in these is finished

Rembusch Screen Facts

Article 1

THE PICTURE SCREEN is the most abused article in the motion picture theatre. There are more poor pictures on account of poor screens than for any other cause. The reason for this is that everybody that can throw a paint brush imagines they can make screens and the fact of the matter is it is a very difficult and ingenious task to make a screen that does good work. You can show a picture on a brick wall or the side of a barn, but not the kind of a picture that satisfies.

Listen! If you buy a lens to throw the picture light to the screen you buy a certain lens to fit certain conditions. Therefore, isn't it reasonable that the screen must be a certain screen for certain conditions if it is to bring the picture light in your theatre to the eye? If every throw and every screen was the same size every lens could be the same, and if every picture theatre was the same size and shape, with the same lens and throw, then every screen could be alike. We build screens to fit your conditions in order to give the highest possible efficiency. A certain kind of screen may be all right for one theatre and all wrong for another.

I have been making motion picture screens continuously—longer than any man in the world, and since I first began making screens over a thousand screen fellows have come and gone. Not one man in ten thousand knows the true philosophy of the screen. We have made thousands of experiments and given it very deep study. If we can't answer any questions with reference to any screen or any condition we are willing to throw up our hands and quit. We have placed screens in every State in the Union and in many foreign countries.

If you want "pep" and beauty, life and reality in your pictures look after the heart of your show—the screen. Let us build you a Rembusch Screen. We have been running theatres since the days of one reel for a nickel. We are practical; we are efficient; we know our business, and we are attending to it. Let us hear from you.

in mahogany and the standards in gold bronze. The loge and box chairs, of which there are more than three hundred, are of reed, extra large, with comfortable arms, and are upholstered to harmonize with the draperies of the house. A feature of the seating arrangement is the space left between rows, making it possible for those already seated to retain their seats when others desire to pass in front of them.

The erection of a motion picture theatre of this size and the expenditure of such a large sum in decorating and furnishing a house in Oakland illustrates the faith of the management of the Turner and Dahnken circuit in this city and in the future of the motion picture business. The population of this city in 1910 was 150,000, but it has grown much since then and the new house will draw from a territory having a population of about 300,000. Outside of San Francisco, Oakland is the largest unit in the Greater San Francisco, which now has an estimated population of 1,000,000, divided among a number of municipalities. The new house of Turner and Dahnken is to be conducted under the management of G. E. Thornton, who has had charge of the other Oakland house of this concern for several years. Claude E. Langley is the directing manager of the firm and upon him devolved much of the work of planning the new house and selecting the equipment. Other houses on the Turner and Dahnken circuit are located at San Francisco, Stockton, Richmond, San Jose, Watsonville, Sacramento, Berkeley and Reno. The house at Portland, Oregon, was recently closed in order that the firm might concentrate its efforts nearer home.

ILLINOIS

Springfield, Ill.—As soon as the electrical equipment can be installed, F. A. Horn will open a motion picture theatre in Loami, a neighboring village. It will be Loami's first motion picture house. The town has no electric plant. The owner announces that feature films will be shown.

LOUISIANA

The Southern Amusement Company, which operates the Arcade, Princess and Dreamland theatres, has acquired the two-story brick building in Ryan street, near Broad, formerly owned by the Bloch estate, and is planning to convert the entire building into a motion picture theatre, to be named the "Imperial." When the alterations have been completed the building will house one of the best picture theatres in the state. It will have a seating capacity of close to 1,000 persons, and will be used for the exhibition of high-class pictures. Typhoon fans will be installed both in this and the Arcade theatre, providing strictly modern ventilation. The building when completed will represent a total investment of $40,000.

MISSOURI

The New Centre theatre, with 1,600 seating capacity, was opened at Kansas City, Mo., recently. The new theatre is said to be the largest photoplay house in Kansas City. A $7,000 organ has been installed. Carl Boller & Brother were the architects.

NEW YORK

The new Palace theatre, Olean, N. Y., under the ownership of Bordonaro Bros., is rapidly nearing completion and will probably be opened before Christmas. The house will show Paramount pictures six days a week, this policy having been decided upon considerably in advance of the opening. The house is being rushed to completion and has attracted a great deal of attention among the inhabitants of Olean.

CALIFORNIA

Work on the magnificent new California theatre at Fourth and Market streets, San Francisco, is being rushed by the Market Street Realty Company and the erection of the steel frame will be commenced at an early date, the foundation work being completed. This theatre will have a seating capacity of more than three thousand and is expected to surpass anything of its kind in this country.

Announcement has been made that the Turner and Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco will erect a motion picture theatre at Ninth street and Macdonald avenue, Richmond, Cal., at an estimated cost of $65,000. A theater is now being conducted there by this concern, but a larger one is desired.

Work has been started at Dinuba, Cal., on the erection of a one-story brick motion picture house for H. T. Haden and W. P. Boone. The structure will cost about $8,000.

The new Strand theatre at Los Gatos, Cal., has been opened under the management of Mrs. R. M. Black.

A fine motion picture theatre is being erected at Marysville, Cal., for K. A. Adelsburg and will be ready within a few weeks. It will have a seating capacity of about 1,000.

Charles Goodwin, who recently purchased the Fairyland theatre at San Francisco, Cal., from Cory Bros., is making extensive alterations in the house.

A. Oberle, formerly well known in San Francisco, has purchased the Bay Station theatre at Alameda, Cal., and has made extensive changes.

The excavating work for the new U. C. theatre on University avenue, Berkeley, Cal., has been completed and actual construction is now under way. This theatre is to have a seating capacity of two thousand, all on one floor.

FLORIDA

The new Imperial theatre in Jacksonville was opened to the public on December 15, under the management of E. J. Sparks, and "Metro" productions are being shown.

INDIANA

Plans for remodeling the Strand theatre at Indianapolis are being prepared and call for extensive improvements, chief among which will be the installation of new chairs. All the work is to be performed during the hours of 11 P. M. and 11 A. M., so that the regular performances of the theatre will not be interfered with. The new chairs will provide a seating capacity of 900, and will be upholstered in leather, placed thirty-eight inches apart as compared with thirty inches clearance as at present and will allow patrons to pass in and out without molesting others. Thick carpets will be laid in the aisles throughout and the box will be placed on a line with the sidewalk. A new screen and two new projecting machines will be installed and improved heating facilities will make the building comfortable. The present pipe organ will be used fifteen minutes in each hour and an orchestra will provide the musical program during the other forty-five minutes.

IOWA

L. B. Longnecker is building a new motion picture theatre at Sioux City, the name of which has not yet been selected. He is installing a transverter machine, two simplexed and a minusa screen. It is a suburban house.

KENTUCKY

J. A. Thompson is fitting up a vacant building at 214 North Nineteenth street, Middlesboro, in which he plans to open a motion picture theatre shortly. This will be the fourth such theatre in Middlesboro.

MISSOURI

The Victoria theatre, on Delmar near Grand avenue, St. Louis, opened on December 18 for a four weeks' engagement of Thos. H. Ince's "Civilization." This is the first time the film has been exhibited in St. Louis, and special arrangements have been made with the Harper Film Company, whereby the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Christmas Festival Fund, under whose auspices the film is being exploited, will be benefited by the showing. The prices of admission are 25, 50 and 75 cents a seat.

NEBRASKA

Mrs. Margaret Develin is building a brand new theatre to seat 350 people at Plainview and has already installed a Simplex machine and all equipment will be modern in every detail.

L. C. Lovell, of Maywood, has ordered from an Omaha firm chairs and other equipment for a new theatre that he will have ready for opening on December 19. This is the first theatre in Maywood and although the town has a population of only 400, it has a good surrounding country territory to draw from, and Mr. Lovell intends to show the best pictures he can secure. Admission prices will be 10 and 15 cents and will show on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday of each week the year round.

OHIO

Plans are being made for the erection of a new theatre in the central business district of Chillicothe, Ohio, by Messrs. Albert Douglas and August P. Herman, owners of the Queen and Star theatres of that community, which have been under the management of C. A. Smith, and have been the Paramount exhibitors in that community for a number of years.

The new theatre when completed, will have a seating capacity equal to the Queen and Star theatres, and will be built along the most modern lines, running from the main street to the block in the rear, and having exits on all sides, with a modern ventilating system, and the latest theatre equipments.

Mr. Smith has been showing the Paramount Pictures with great success.

New Two Thousand Seat House for Capital

WASHINGTON is to have another large theatre, to be known as the Willard theatre, located on F street with a stage entrance on Thirteenth street. The property includes ground to the extent of 16,500 square feet, involving an investment of $400.000. Negotiations have been under way for some time, but have just been completed through H. R. Dulaney, representing the Willard estate, and R. S. McGill, for the Thomas J. Fisher & Company, real estate, agents.

Those chiefly responsible for the deal are George M. Mann, manager of the local Paramount Exchange; A. T. Babcock, and C. M. Caset. The building will be erected under the corporation known as the Willard Theatre Company, plans for which have been drawn by the Hoffman Company of New York and Philadelphia.

The main entrance will be on F street, with exits on Thirteenth street. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 2,200, with two tiers of boxes and balcony with a large main floor capacity.

Owing to the deep slope of the land on Thirteenth street, it is proposed to have inclined planes give entrance to the parquet floor and balcony. These will be gradual through the 100-foot lobby. The "Ramp" system will be used in construction, with the exception of the stairways from the upper to the lower box levels, though these, also may be reached by the inclined planes. This is an advantage which will be welcomed by patrons.

In locating this new house on F street, those in charge are going away from the picture district of the downtown section and yet remain within the amusement part of the city. Ninth street, from G street to Pennsylvania avenue, a distance of five blocks, is the white lights of Filmland in the Capital City. It was Mr. Mann's desire to break away from this section in giving to the city the handsome theatre he proposes.

The furnishings, decorations and architectural designs, both interior and exterior, will be artistic and in keeping with the purpose of the structure. It is proposed to have this house stand out as a model in up-to-date theatre structure. Ground will be broken at an early date and completion is scheduled for the opening by September 1, 1917.
